MARK HANNA, WHO HAS SO ABLY MANAGED McKINLEY'S CAMPAIGN

THE DAY'S DOINGS.

Rain Dampens the Ardor of the Army of Visitors.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST LOUIS, June 17—A chilling rain began at 8 o'clock this morning and the second day of the great Republican Convention promises to be very disagreeable

Flags and bunting are hanging limp and the spirits of the delegates are correspondingly depressed

There is little interest felt by the great mass of delegates now that McKinley's nomination is certain and the platform settled except perhaps as to a few technical points of phraseology in which comparatively few are much interested

There has been no inspiring oratory, and the street parades have palled upon the taste

The contest over the Vice Presidency will probably put life into the convention as soon as the nomination for President has been made

The fight lies between Garrett A Hobart of New Jersey and Morton of New York The drift seems to be towards Morton in spite of the protests of the anti-Platt faction of New York, headed by Miller, and of Mark Hanna

However, the situation may change very rapidly in either direction after the convention effects permanent organization and settles down to business.

The weather, if it continues disagreeable will likely shorten the convention, as the delegates are already getting tired and anxious to get away

Two days ago it seemed certain the convention would not adjourn before Friday night

Now in spite of the practical impossibility of getting through with so much business there is talk of adjournment tonight

It is probable the end will be reached tomorrow

This may interfere with the plans for a huge demonstration in honor of McKinley that has been projected

The brass bands last night and the heat indoors kept most of the delegates in the streets until a late hour, and they were late in getting out this morning.

THE MORTON BOOM.

Hanna's Position Is Rather Exasperating to Platt's Forces.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST LOUIS, June 17—The complex situation last night in which the feud between the New York factions was the principal factor, coupled with the desire to put the Hanna and McKinley managers on record, continued this morning without material change

Platt was up early this morning and saw the leaders of the Indiana and Illinois delegations before 9 o'clock He was pursuing his usual tactics, stating his position to all leaders of the delegation whether favorable or unfavorable to his cause He would only say cautiously "In the event of Morton's defeat on the Presidential issue it is thought Morton would accept second place and then he would ask for support

Every care was taken at the New York Headquarters not to in any way antagonize Hanna or mention him as an enemy of the Morton boom for Vice President

Chairman Hackett, of the New York Committee, said Hanna cannot be expected to enter into this fight when he has the McKinley fight upon his shoulders. Surely he has honors enough in securing first place for his candidate

At the Ohio headquarters up to 9 30 o clock, no definite answer had been given Miller or Cornelius Bliss as to their proposition to secure aid in their fight against Morton and they were getting uneasy

Milholland however, said there was no doubt there would be assistance lent by friends of McKinley in the West to those in the East who assisted them

The Morton people this morning figure the following vote for Morton for Vice President

New York, 56.
Delaware, 6
Maryland 16
Michigan 26
Nebraska, 16
Connecticut, 12
Florida, 6
Massachusetts, 30
Minnesota 16
New Hampshire 8
North Dakota, 16
Pennsylvania, 64
South Dakota, 8
Texas 30
Wisconsin, 24
Vermont, 8
Mississippi, 18
Ohio, 24
Rhode Island, 8.
Tennessee, 24.
Indiana, 16
Missouri, 11
Utah, 6
Total, 445

For a choice it would be necessary to have 450 votes.

When Warner Miller was asked to speak upon Hanna's queer attitude he said "Hanna will show his hand after the nomination of McKinley has been accomplished. Wait until then We had several delegates telegraph Gov Morton as to his Vice Presidential aspirations but he has not been heard from yet."

As the morning wore on it was evident that all the influence the Miller crowd could bring to bear was used with Chauncey M Depew to get him to withdraw from nominating Morton for President

It was urged that it was perfectly evident that Morton was in the race for Vice President and therefore he should withdraw from the Presidency.

Depew's answer was, Morton assures me he is in the race I must nominate him according to agreement

SWITCHING THE SEATS.

A Rearrangement for the Better Handling of the Delegates.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

CONVENTION HALL ST LOUIS June 17—Many changes have been made in the seats of the delegates in Convention Hall

The officers of the convention have arranged the seats in alphabetical order, according to States.

Some delegates maintain their places, especially those near the top of the list, but beginning with Maryland the changes are numerous.

Maine remains as before exactly in front of the Speaker's stand

The New York delegation is crowded far back in the middle section.

Oregon is behind New York

In the third section, North Carolina occupies the first row and all but four seats of the second, which will probably be occupied by the big four, Foraker, Bushnell, Hanna and Grosvenor

Some of the changes will probably cause considerable feeling

The Virginia delegation which was near the front of the first section has been relegated to the rear of the third section

The States most benefited by the changes are Michigan Minnesota Mississippi Missouri Montana, Nebraska New Hampshire Nevada and New Jersey

Every seat has been tagged with the name of the State whose delegate is to occupy it and it is believed there will be no confusion in seating the delegates

The Assistant Sergeants-at-Arms entitled to the floor are decorated with white badges

The rearrangement of employes has been made in the hope that there will be more efficient service on the floor of the convention had, and better order preserved in the hall.

AWAITING THE SIGNAL.

Patriotic Airs Received With Enthusiasm by the Galleries.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST LOUIS, June 17—The Committee on Resolutions which remained in session until 4 o'clock this morning and the Committee on Credentials were at work again at 10 o'clock this morning the hour set for the Convention to meet.

The preamble and several planks of the platform agreed upon by sub-committees and telegraphed to the country last night exclusively by the Associated Press will be adopted by the full committee but the indications were that the report could not be submitted to the Convention until the afternoon.

The work going on behind the scenes in no way affected the attendance at the Convention Hall

The clouds lowering over the city threatened but the crowds, bands and clubs streamed to the hall and spread themselves over the wilderness of seats

The delegates' seats in the pit had been carefully ticketed since yesterday and a staff marked the location of the delegations

This prevented much of the confusion and disorder manifested on the floor yesterday

The delegates and alternates moved to their places quickly without demonstration

The band in the gallery played the Florodale quickstep and gallops and popular airs as the convention assembled

Senator Lodge, member of the Resolutions Committee, elbowed his way up the aisle for a final conference with his New England friends but no other members of that committee were in the Hall

The leaders as a rule were late in arriving

The music was inspiring and the scene was one of life and animation The busy pencillers of the press were hard at work

Dark faces in the delegations marked their geographical location on the map of the country without recourse to the delegation staffs Some of the colored delegates are magnificent specimens of manhood and attract much attention.

Here and there, through the northern delegations was a swarthy face Among the notable colored men in the Convention were ex-Congressman Small a famous negro pilot of South Carolina whose services to the Union navy in the days of war, were recently recognized by Congress James Hill of Mississippi, and John M. Langston of Virginia.

The two distinguished sons of General Grant, Col Fred Grant, of New York, who was Minister to Austria, and U. S Grant of San Diego, Cal, sat side by side in the space reserved for guests

At 10 25 the band struck up a medley of patriotic airs which was received with cheers and plaudits by the packed galleries

The belated leaders moved down into their places

Platt and General Bushnell of Ohio came in together The Tioga statesman jostled ex-Senator Warner Miller as he passed but no sign of recognition passed between them The feud between New York leaders is bitter.

Mark Hanna, who was among the last political generals to appear, was stopped every step by delegates and greeted in the warmest fashion There was, however, no open demonstration. He stepped up on the platform and held a whispered consultation with Senator Carter.

As they stood conversing Chairman Fairbanks moved to the front of the platform and dropped the gavel on the second session of the Convention.

FAVORING MORTON.

The New Yorker's Chances for the Vice Presidency Increase.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST LOUIS, June 17—The announcement was made just as the Convention was called to order that Foraker would nominate Morton for the Vice Presidency as soon as the ballot for President was finished practically settled the gossip of the morning

The plan is that when a motion to nominate McKinley by acclamation is made, to also include Levi P Morton for Vice President

It looks as if the plan will carry, although there may be opposition.

AN EXCITING START.

Dissenters Raise a Rumpus but Are Soon Brought to Time

By Associated Press to The Tribune

ST LOUIS, June 17—Temporary Chairman Fairbanks was obliged to hammer vigorously when twenty minutes before eleven he attempted to quell the tumult into working order

On the platform at his left stood Mark Hanna the focus of every eye beside him With friendly hand on his shoulder and pouring confidence into Hanna's ear was Carter of Montana, the retiring Chairman of the National Committee For five minutes Fairbanks rested on his oars while the ushers perspired in futile attempts to persuade or compel compliance to the Chairman's request

Then in a voice which hardly projected itself to the centre of the pit, Fairbanks said

The Convention will be in order"

The Convention was in comparative good order upon the introduction of Dr Wilbur Williams, pastor of the Union M. E Church of St Louis, who made the prayer.

"Dr. Williams moved to the edge of the platform with outstretched arms The audience arose and all stood while the invocation was being delivered

Dr. Williams is a striking looking man. His strong, smooth face is deeply furrowed, he wore gold bowed glasses. The people watched him intently but his words were not heard twenty feet away

As he lifted his head at the conclusion of the prayer the crowd sank back into the seats and the convention was again under way

"The Senator from Massachusetts," announced the Chairman at the conclusion of the prayer whereupon there was an outburst of applause as the delegates perceived a trim and fashionably clad person, Henry Cabot Lodge the embodiment of a polished Puritan, in the aisle before the platform

Lodge asked for the Committee on Resolutions the privilege of sitting during the progress of the convention He said the sub-committee had completed the platform and it was being considered by the full committee He asked leave to report this afternoon

The chairman's call for the report of the Committee on Credentials met no responses and that committee was passed

Senator Sewell of New Jersey and Senator Wellington of Maryland asked unanimous consent to make the reports of the Committees on Permanent Organization and on Rules, but objections were heard

A motion by Wellington of Maryland that the Convention take a recess until 2 o clock was buried under an overwhelming chorus of "Noes" and the delegates applauded their decision

The Chairman called loudly to know what was the further pleasure of the Convention

Several resolutions were handed up and referred to the Committee on Rules, without debate

The Convention seemed to be at a standstill

Sewell of New Jersey again jumped to his feet and this time moved that the report of the Committee on permanent organization be received out of order. His motion was greeted with cheers by the galleries who were impatient to have the Convention proceed, but from the floor came angry cries of "No" "No"

The motion was put and Chairman Fairbanks declared it carried

Wellington indignantly protested that the question was out of order as the Convention could not suspend rules. His point was warmly seconded by Delegate Littlefield of Maine

The chair ruled that both the gentlemen were out of order as the Convention had decided to receive the report.

When the reading clerk in reading the committee report, announced "John M Thurston of Nebraska," be permanent Chairman there was an eruption of flags and cheers from the delegates

A demonstration also greeted the name of "U S Grant of California"

The heat was becoming intense, a heat of the damp, wilting, sunless sort, which crimpled collars and kept the whole area a fluttering of gaudy fans.

The reading of the report on permanent organization was followed by a wild tumultuous scene.

Mudd of Maryland, jumped to his feet and loudly protested against action upon the report

"It can be received" he shouted, "but it cannot be acted upon Nothing can be done until the Convention has acted on the report of the Committee on Credentials Until that committe has reported here is no contention"

Chairman Fairbanks overruled the point of order and left Mudd angrily shouting on the floor

As Fairbanks called for a vote on the adoption of the report, Mudd demanded a call of the roll

His demand was seconded by delegate Evans of Minnesota

Fairbanks, however, called for a rising vote and the convention seemed to rise en masse to his call

The galleries cheered and pandemonium reigned a minute as the Convention realized the overwhelming defeat of the few dissenters against the immediate adoption of the report

Sewell of New Jersey and Congressman Senecca Payne of New York were designated to escort the permanent Chairman to the platform They marched down the main aisle while the delegates jumped to their feet, fluttering flags and handkerchiefs and cheering shrilly with a yell that reminded the southerners of the Confederacy

Fairbanks with a plume of the National tri-color pinned to the breast of his black frock coat stepped to the front

THE SCENE IN THE CONVENTION HALL.

meeting the trio and grasped the Nebraskan by the hand

Thurston faced the arena with his hands behind him and began to speak

THURSTON TALKS.

A Ringing Speech That Brought a Tumult of Applause.

By Associated Press to The Tribune

ST LOUIS, June 17—Thurston spoke as follows

"Gentlemen of the Convention This happy memory of your kindness and confidence will abide in my grateful memory forever My sole ambition is to meet your expectations, and I pledge myself to exercise the important powers of this high office with absolute impartiality.

"I beseech your cordial co-operation and support, to the end that our proceedings may be orderly and dignified, as befits a celebration of the Supreme Council of the Republican party

'Eight years ago I had the distinguished honor to preside over the convention which nominated the last Republican President of the United States

'Today I have the further distinguished honor to preside over the convention which is to nominate the next President of the United States

"This generation has its object lesson and the doom of Democracy is already pronounced The American people will return the Republican party to power because they know its administration will mean supremacy of the Constitution of the United States maintenance of law protection of every American citizen in his right to live, labor and vote, a vigorous foreign policy, the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine the restoration of our merchant marine, safety under the Stars and Stripes on every sea and in every port a revenue adequate for all the Government expenditures and the gradual extinguishment of the national debt, currency as sound as the Government and as untarnished as its honor, whose dollars whether of gold, silver or paper, shall have an equal purchasing and debt paying power, will be the best dollars of the civilized world a protective tariff, which protects, coupled with reciprocity, and which reciprocates by securing the best market for our products and opening the American factories to the free coinage of American muscle, a pension policy just and generous to our living heroes and to the widows and orphans of their dead comrades a Governmental supervision and control of the transportation lines and rates, the protection of the people from all unlawful combination and the unjust action of aggregated capital and corporated power an American welcome to every God fearing, liberty loving, Constitution respecting, law abiding, labor seeking decent man, the exclusion of all whose birth, whose blood, whose condition whose teaching, whose practices would menace the permanency of the free institutions, endanger the safety of the American people or lessen the opportunities of American labor; the abolition of sectionalism; every star in the American flag shining for the honor and welfare and happiness of every commonwealth and of all the people, a deathless loyalty to all that is truly American, and a patriotism as eternal as the stars."

The punctuation of almost every sentence of his address was a period of yells, rounded off with a fringe of manual applause and stamping.

Thurston is a tall, slender, dark faced black moustached, spectacled, scholarly looking man. His voice, keyed for the stump, sent every word ringing to the farthest corner of the galleries No point of his speech was lost upon the assembly, but that which provoked the most enthusiastic uproar was the statement that he presided over the convent on which nominated the last Republican President and was now addressing that to name the next Republican President

The delegates arose and waved their hands flags and handkerchiefs with a prolonged cheer when Thurston finished

As the demonstration ceased by direction of Permanent Chairman Thurston, a letter was read from J Henry Fort Chairman of the Committee on Credentials announcing the committee would be unable to report until afternoon

Thereupon Governor Bushnell of Ohio moved the Convention take a recess until 2 o clock

The motion was carried with a roar and at 11 23 Chairman Thurston declared the Convention in recess

The band played "Yankee Doodle" as the crowd found its way out of the hall.

BUILDING THE PLATFORM.

A Tragic Scene When the Money Question Was Discussed.

By Associated Press to The Tribune

ST LOUIS, June 17—The Committee on Resolutions took up the platform promptly on being called together at 10 30.

After reading it as a whole Chairman Foraker stated the sub-committee had given the different declarations fullest consideration during the night, and had the council of the best thought of the party, not only in decoding on the principles of the party but also in the forms for expressing the same

It was decided to take the sections up seriatim, for consideration.

The whereas in which the history and mission of the party were covered was adopted without opposition It is as follows.

"The Republicans of the United States, assembled by their representatives in National Convention, appealing for the popular and historical justification of their claims to the bitter fruits of four years of Democratic control, as well as the matchless achievements of thirty years of Republican rule, earnestly and confidently address themselves to the awakened intelligence experience and conscience of their countrymen in the following declaration of facts and principles

'For the first time since the Civil War the American people have now witnessed the calamitous consequences of full and unrestricted Democratic control of the government It has been a record of unparalleled incapacity, dishonor and disaster In its administrative management it has ruthlessly sacrificed indispensible revenue, picked out ordinary current running expenses with borrowed money piled up the public debt to $262 000 000 in time of peace, forced an adverse balance of trade kept a perpetual menace hanging over the redemption fund, pawned American credit to alien syndicates and reversed all the measures and results of successful Republican rule In the brief effect of its policy it has precipitated panic blighted industry and trade with prolonged depression closed factories reduced work and wages, halted enterprise and crippled American production while stimulating foreign production for the American market. Every consideration of public safety and individual interest demands that the government shall be rescued from the hand of those who have shown themselves incapable of conducting it without disaster at home and dishonor abroad, and shall be restored to the party which for thirty years administered it with unequaled success and prosperity

There was some difference of opinion as to the severity of the language of the indictment of Cleveland's administration

Chairman Foraker defended it very earnestly and it was adopted without any changes.

THE TARIFF.

The tariff plank was adopted as follows:

"We renew and emphasize our adhesion to the policy of protection as the bulwark of American independence and the foundation of American development and prosperity. This true American policy taxes foreign products and encourages home industry; it puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods, it secures the American market for the American producer, it upholds the American standard of wages for the American working man; it puts the factory by the side of the farm and makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price; it diffuses general thrift and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its responsible application it is just, fair and impartial equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism.

"We denounce the political Democratic tariff as sectional, partisan and one-sided and disastrous to the Treasury and destructive of business enterprise and we demand such an equitable tariff on foreign imports which come into competition with American products, as will not only furnish adequate revenue for the necessary expenses of the government but will protect American labor from degradation and the wage level of other lands. We are not pledged to any particular schedule The question of rates is a practical question to be governed by the condition of time and production The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industry The country wants a right settlement and then it wants rest

The Republican party renews its pledge for the protection of all American industries against foreign competition and declares its faith that the supremacy of the United States among the nations is the result of such a policy We believe in liberal reciprocity and just retaliation and demand the application of the golden rule of commerce to all future legislation affecting the tariff and the foreign trade. We believe the repeal of the reciprocity arrangements negotiated by the last Republican Administration was a national calamity and demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations and remove the restrictions that now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of Europe and secure new markets for the products of our farms, forests and factories

"We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade American shipping, the product of American labor employed in American shipyards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes and manned, officered

SUGAR BOUNTIES.

There was no opposition to even the language in any of the sections until the sugar bounty section was reached.

There was some objection to the form of this resolution, and brief speeches were made in support of various propositions. One of these was to amend the resolution by declaring for a specific duty on sugar, and another for a specific declaration for tariff protection. None of these were accepted, and the resolution as sent out last night by the Associated Press was adopted. It is as follows:

"We condemn the present Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of the country. The Republican party favors such measures of encouragement and protection as will speedily lead to the production on American soil of all sugar which Americans use and for which they pay to other countries more than $100,000,000 annually."

Patterson of Illinois and Lauterbach of New York contended for a declaration for a specific duty.

Senator Gear of Iowa contended for the merit of the bounty system, saying the main object was to protect the original producers of sugar in this country, and the bounty system was well calculated to accomplish this purpose.

The committee also adopted resolutions declaring specifically for adequate protection of wool and woolens.

THE FINANCIAL FIGHT.

At 12 o'clock the financial question was taken up.

Teller opened the discussion by offering the various substitutes which he presented in sub-committee. There were three of them, as follows:

Number 1. "The Republican party favors the use of both gold and silver as equal standard money, and pledges its power to secure the free, unrestricted and independent coinage of gold and silver at our mints at the ratio of sixteen parts of silver to one of gold."

Number 2. "Whereas, The basis of the great doctrine of protection is to give constancy of employment and high wages to the toilers, and upon this basis the great men of the party have stood and the party's victories have been achieved; and whereas, the effect of the single gold standard in this country is to make employment insecure and to decrease the wages of the toilers by decreasing the prices of human production; and whereas, since the single gold standard and protection are irreconcilable, it follows that a party cannot reasonably declare for both and attempt to achieve the purposes of both; and if the Republican party shall devote itself to the single gold standard it will be led to the financial policy which commends Americans to buy where they can buy the cheapest; and whereas, if the Republican party is to continue as the advocate and exponent of protection to the American people it must logically oppose the single gold standard policy; now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Republican party, in National Convention assembled, holding to the great truth that its highest mission is to advance the interests of the toilers of the United States, hereby reaffirms the doctrines and protection to American industries and resolves to use all its power to achieve bimetallism, being the free, unrestricted and independent coinage of silver at our mints as they were coined previous to 1873."

Number 3. "The Republican party pledges itself to the free coinage of all silver which may be produced in this country and offered at the mints at the ratio of sixteen parts of silver to one of gold."

Teller made a vigorous speech in support of his resolutions, becoming quite animated when he warmed up. He had scarcely begun when the members of the press who lined the hall outside the room in which the committee was meeting were invited to a more distant section of the hotel.

The excuse was made that the committee wanted the use of the hallway for air, but the fact that the Colorado Senator's voice penetrated the walls and was plainly heard on the outside was accepted as the real reason for the eviction of the press.

As the Senator proceeded, he was warmly applauded by his followers.

He spoke vehemently in opposition to the gold standard plank, declaring his belief that in taking this course the party was departing from its vaunted position of defender of the rights of the people and putting itself in the hands of the bond clippers of Lombard and Wall streets. This policy he denounced as unAmerican, unpatriotic and opposed to all the best interests of humanity. He expressed sincere regret that such a course should be adopted, not because it affected him personally, but because it was a step that would seriously affect the welfare of the people of the entire country.

As for himself, he had been a Republican since the ante-bellum days. He had assisted in securing the nomination of Lincoln and had supported him in the campaign. Naturally, therefor, the step now proposed was regarded by him in the most serious light, and he sincerely hoped the step would not be taken.

Teller said if the gold standard plank as proposed was adopted, he would consider it incumbent upon him to sever his connection with the Convention. Believing as he did upon this subject, which was of all questions nearest his heart, he could not consistently continue connections with the body which was so determined to antagonize his conceptions of right and duty and, as he believed, stultify its own record.

Senators Dubois, Idaho, and Cannon, Utah, Myers, Mott, N. C., and Cleveland followed in similar strain, also announcing determination to bolt the Convention in case the, to them, obnoxious gold standard plank was adopted.

Darlington, Penn., replied briefly to Teller, challenging the Senator's allusion to the dictation of Lombard street and saying this was a poor return for the money amounting to many millions of dollars which had been invested in the West by men of the East and building railroads and other enterprises.

"We have given you our money freely," he said, "and are surprised you should now want to pay us in money worth only 50 cents on the dollar."

"Colorado," responded Mr. Teller, "has always paid her debts and will continue to pay them. What we object to is paying $2 for one dollar received."

He then proceeded to briefly show silver had not depreciated but it was gold that had increased in value.

Lodge spoke briefly but largely in a way personal to Teller. He spoke of the esteem in which the Colorado Senator was held and the respect felt for him, but said notwithstanding this feeling, it was impossible to follow his idea of the financial policy. To do so would be ruinous to the great commercial interests of the country. That the Colorado Senator was honest in his convictions and serious in their support no man could doubt, but that he was right did not follow. He regretted they had come to a parting of ways, but the party was not the seeking of the gold standard men, and if it could not be prevented it would have to be endured.

Cannon, Utah, said there was no use for the Republican party taking an effort in his State this year under the millstone of a single gold standard platform. He was severe in his charges against the money power and its domination over this convention. He described the depressed condition of the country, especially his State, and gave notice that he and others would stand by Teller, who truly represented them.

Lemmon (Cal.) advocated the Teller amendment strongly. He insisted that with the majority report as the declaration of the party, their plurality of 40,000 in his State would not only be wiped out but the masses would become alienated from the party indefinitely.

While Mott and Lemmon were as vigorous as could be in protesting against "the pressure" of the gold standard, they did not state in their speeches that they would go out of the convention with Teller. They did state, however, to members of the committee afterward that they would all stand by Teller and if defeated in the convention would declare themselves out of the party and do the best they could for their people hereafter.

Members of the committee who came out of the rooms said they never witnessed such touching scenes in politics.

Some of the silver men shed tears while speaking.

Senator Cannon wept, crying aloud as he pleaded for Utah. No funeral could be so sad to him. They loved the party that was about to smite them and cast them out.

Cannon's speech was pronounced the most impressive and affecting. He pictured in very fine language the hope raised in the breasts of the people of Utah and the inter-mountain West by the promises of the Republican party; told how the State had been redeemed from Democratic ranks and an overwhelming majority overcome, and all for what—merely to have all the promises made in behalf of the Republicans ruthlessly trodden in the mire and ignored at the time of their greatest need for a sustaining hand. This course was to them subject of amazement and deepest sorrow. He had hoped up to the latest moment that this catastrophe could be averted, but if it could not be, he, too, deeply as the course pained him, must discontinue to act with the party. His conscience and the interest and convictions of his people demanded this course.

Dubois was most vehement in his utterances as to the result. He showed no emotion but was firmly defiant. He dwelt especially upon the service the West had been to the Republican party, showing that that section never in the hour of the party's need had been untrue to the party call. He dwelt especially upon the strength of the West in the Senate and showed that through the votes of that section in the Senate the Republican party owed the maintenance of its protective policy and all the other party policies. Often when their own section's interests were in no wise involved he asserted the inter-mountain States had been regular in supplying the two Senators for the support of these lines of policy while New York, with not one Republican Senator, and Illinois with only one, and the Southern States, to say nothing of Indiana, Wisconsin and other Northern States, which had not been for years represented in the Senate, are inaugurating a contest which is not only ruinous to the West, but as he believed to the end of the country—not only ruinous but unpatriotic and contrary to the principles of the party. In view of these facts, he, too, felt constrained to announce his intention of leaving the convention in case of the adoption of the gold plank.

Mott, of North Carolina, followed in much the same strain as the silver Senators but touched upon the effects of the adoption of a gold standard upon the country at large. He declared, however, that McKinley was not a gold standard advocate, and if the proposed gold standard platform was adopted it would be done contrary to the Governor's wishes and convictions. He also asserted that Secretary Carlisle, who so recently had been loud in his denunciation of the demonetization of silver, was the first man to plan for a single gold standard. This the secretary had done in his Nashville speech and he had soon been followed by his chief, President Cleveland, in an announcement of his adherence to this position. Despite this the Republican party now proposed to follow the lead of the Democratic administration.

He referred to the issuance of bonds by the Cleveland administration which had, he said, aroused the antagonism of the country, but he declared the party was putting itself in such a position that it would be impossible for it to take advantage of this against the Democratic party. He did not say in so many words that he would leave the convention, but he left the impression that he would.

Senator Carter came out of the committee room and conferred with the silver delegates in waiting. He would say nothing, but left his friends for conference.

The States voting for the Teller amendment were as follows:

California—Allen B. Lemmon.
Idaho—Fred T. Dubois.
Nevada—A. C. Cleveland.
Utah—F. J. Cannon.
Colorado—H. M. Teller.
Montana—Charles Hartman.
North Carolina—M. L. Mott.
Wyoming—B. F. Fowler.
Also the members from Arizona and New Mexico.

Teller was cool throughout the debate.

After the Teller amendment was defeated by a vote of 13 to 41, the financial plank of the majority was taken up and the discussion resumed, the gold men having the floor. The plank is as follows:

"The Republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879, and since then every dollar has been as good as gold. We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are, therefore, opposed to the free coinage of silver, except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved. All our silver and paper currency now in circulation must be maintained at a parity with gold. We favor all measures designed to maintain inviolable the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth."

The silver members said they felt they were in sad hours of partisan dissolution but they would proceed as courteously and regularly as possible and not leave the party, until they had appealed to the court of last resort.

The Platform Committee finally adopted the financial plank proposed by the sub-committee, with slight amendments, by a vote of 40 to 11, Oklahoma joining the silverites.

The foreign plank is general in its nature, outlining a policy in regard to all current foreign questions. It contains a declaration for the protection of American citizens abroad; reaffirms the position of the party in favor of the Monroe Doctrine; indorses the Administration of President Harrison on the attitude of this country toward Hawaii; demands protection for American missionaries in Armenia; expresses sympathy for the Cubans in their war for independence, and takes a position in favor of awarding to them belligerent rights.

3:10 P. M.—The full committee adopted the platform as a whole and decided to report it to the Convention at 8 o'clock tonight.

The Silver members retired for conference and the platform was therefore adopted as a whole unanimously on a viva voce vote.

CREDENTIALS SETTLED.

The Work of the National Committee Is Fully Sustained.

ST. LOUIS, June 16.—The Committee on Credentials to-day adopted by a vote of 31 to 13 resolutions to ratify the findings of the National Committee in all contests except those from Delaware and Texas.

The committee settled the Texas contest by deciding to recommend seating the Grant faction, the vote being 28 to 16.

A resolution offered by Sutherland of New York to seat the Cuney faction was lost by 16 to 29.

Another resolution by Sutherland to seat both delegations, giving each delegate half a vote, failed, 14 to 29.

The Grant delegates are McKinley men.

The Cuneyites support Allison and Reed.

The committee will report this afternoon.

WARM, BUT ENTHUSIASTIC.

An Enormous Attendance at the Afternoon Session.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Long before the hour for the afternoon session the open galleries began to fill up, but the delegates and alternates were slow in arriving.

There was a general anticipation that at this session the most serious work of the convention would begin.

All the work of the convention except the nominations it was believed, would be cleared up at this session.

By 2 o'clock the galleries were solid walls of people and the delegates were again crowding their way to the floor.

The sergeant-at-arms' assistants buzzed like bees in all directions, looking after the comfort of the vast audience.

The heat was somewhat oppressive, and all the delegates had armed themselves with broad palm leaf fans.

The spectators also were similarly provided and the Convention Hall with these waving fans resembled nothing so much as a vast field of waving grain.

Throughout the hall rolled the dull hoarse roar that hangs over a great convention of people as it does over a great bustling city.

Conspicuously seated on the platform were Col. and Mrs. Fred Grant and ex-Senator Carter of Wyoming.

Several members of the National Committee wore the tri-colored plumes, which so long distinguished the followers of the "Plumed Knight."

A great floral shield of brilliant American Beauty roses and rich immortelles graced the platform.

The band discoursed lively and patriotic airs. "Marching Through Georgia" brought a response from the galleries that fairly made the rafters ring.

At 2:30 there were not a hundred unoccupied seats in the galleries, and the people still swarmed through the entrances. Fully 16,000 people were in the galleries.

The calling to order of the convention was intentionally delayed in momentary anticipation of the appearance of the Committee on Resolutions.

Some of the spectators manifested impatience in shrill shouts and cat calls, while an unknown with a strange voice occasionally interpreted his wolf-like howl, "Whoo-e—c—e," which never failed to excite a laugh.

Governor Pushnell, Mark Hanna and General Grosvenor of the Ohio big four, held an animated consultation with Mike De Young, George Knight, the eloquent California orator, and others just before Chairman Thurston dropped the gavel.

THE AFTERNOON'S WORK.

Historic Gavels Are Presented to the Presiding Officer.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—It was exactly 2:40 when Thurston again called the Convention to order.

Quiet came with the first crack of the gavel.

Chairman Thurston called upon Bishop Arnet, President of the Wilberforce College of Ohio, to come to the platform. The name of the divine evoked a round of applause. He was escorted to the platform by Delegate Hill (colored) of Mississippi.

As he took his place, the audience rose. He is of striking figure, clean shaven, of ebon color and a massive frame.

The Bishop gave thanks for "the blessings of liberty," which have been gained by our fathers in days gone by, and for the blessing of liberty given every race under American institutions. He spoke of the "wealth and culture" composing the Convention, gave thanks for Lincoln, who had broken the fetters of the slave, and for the organization which had opened the avenue to advancement to a race long oppressed. He asked that protection and civil liberty be given every man.

At the conclusion of the prayer, Chairman Thurston recognized T. B. Madden of Illinois, who, with a minute speech, presented the Chairman of the Convention with a gavel made from wood taken from the house once owned by Abraham Lincoln.

The gavel, he said, should be presented to the Chairman of the Convention.

Chairman Thurston accepted the gavel with a graceful little speech expressing the hope that the inspiration of the immortal Lincoln may inspire our work here and hereafter," and promised to deliver it after the convention to the man who was to be the next President of the United States.

Before the cheering ceased, Denny of Kentucky, another gavel bearer, mounted the platform to present in behalf of the Young Men's Henry Clay Club of Lexington, Kentucky, a gavel cut from the place on the homestead of the great commoner of Ashland District, "the father of Protection."

In a speech of acceptance Temporary Chairman Fairbanks predicted Kentucky would be permanently Republican, thereby affording the Southern delegates a special opportunity to cheer.

Delegate Terrence of Minnesota, with an appropriate speech, presented to the Convention, a table made by some school boys of Minneapolis for the use of the National Republican Convention held in that city four years ago.

After accepting this table, with a graceful speech, Chairman Thurston called for the report of the Committee on Credentials.

A TIME LIMIT.

Chairman Thurston Anxious to Have the Credentials Settled.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Chairman Thurston informed the members of the Credentials Committee that forty minutes debate would be allowed on the report, twenty minutes for the supporters of the report of the majority for accepting the findings of the National Committee on all but Delaware and Texas contests and for seating the Higgins delegation from Delaware and the Grant men from Texas, and the same time for the minority report against these recommendations.

The majority report will be made by Fort of New Jersey and the minority by Hepburn of Ohio.

Hepburn complains bitterly because no more time is to be given, saying, "It is a gag rule."

The majority report is a formal one of the findings of the Committee.

The minority report declares the majority will give to the National Committee power to decide the personnel of the Convention, a power which no assembly should delegate to a subordinate.

READING THE REPORTS.

The Anti-McKinleyites First Openly Make a Showing.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Delegate Fort of New Jersey, Chairman of the Committee mounted the platform and read the report of the Credentials Committee.

It ratified the action of the National Committee on all contests except Delaware and Texas, in which the National Committee made no findings.

The report recommended seating the Higgins delegation in opposition to the Addicks delegates in Delaware and Grant in opposition to the Cuney delegates in Texas.

The delegates recommended seating from Delaware are non-committal.

The Grant delegation from Texas is for McKinley.

The announcement of the findings of the committee was loudly applauded but there was a wild roar when Hepburn of Iowa presented a minority report protesting in the most vigorous terms against the majority report.

It was the first time the anti-McKinley shouters were given an opportunity and they made the most of it. Though a brief reception was given Hepburn it was a rousing one. The local Filley shouters were largely responsible for this.

Hepburn declared the Convention should not accept the roll call presented by the National Committee. To accept the roll unchallenged he insisted was a most dangerous precedent. He reviewed briefly some of the disputed cases. His reference to the contests in Louisiana, Alabama, and especially in Missouri, were loudly applauded.

The mention of the Missouri contest brought the Filley shouters in the galleries to their feet. For two minutes there were wild shouts for Filley.

The famous Missourian arose in acknowledgment of the enthusiasm of his followers.

The minority report recommended the seating of the Addicks and Cuney delegations of Delaware, and Texas and a recommittal of all the other contests.

No sooner had Hepburn completed the presentation of the minority report than Chairman Fort of the Credentials Committee moved the previous question on the majority report.

Hepburn moved to substitute the minority report.

Chairman Thurston said the vote might be taken on each part of the report separately if separation was demanded and under the rules of the convention, twenty minutes on each side would be given to debate.

Mudd, of Maryland, asked for a separate vote on Delaware.

The chairman began: "The gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Senator Quay," when the Pennsylvania delegate rose, waving his hat and shouting "three cheers for Quay." Three cheers were given by the Pennsylvanians, while the Senator walked down the aisle, relaxed his usually stolid features into a smile and waived his thanks with a fan.

"The gentleman from Pennsylvania seconds the request," Chairman Thurston managed to interject.

The motion for the previous question was carried with a shout.

Then came the first convention demonstration of the so-called combine.

From the Maine section arose a delegate to demand the roll call on the question and from Iowa came another voice seconding the demand. Thereupon roll call began.

"I make a point of order," shouted Hepburn, "that several State delegations are contested and have no right to vote on this question."

Shouts of approval followed this point from the New England, Iowa and Pennsylvania delegations.

"The Chair overrules the point of order," responded Thurston promptly, his voice ringing out like a pistol shot across the field of heads strained forward to catch the decision.

The roll was now called, and the previous question was carried by a vote of 568½ to 338½.

This settled the Credentials report.

ADJOURNED TO TOMORROW.

The Great Contests Will Be Fought Out in Daylight.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—At 5:07 P. M. Grosvenor moved that the Convention adjourn until the next day at 10 A. M.

There was some opposition but the motion carried.

THE SILVER MEN'S PLANS.

They Will Not Make a Gallery Play During the Convention.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The Silver Republicans of the National Convention have practically decided, that whatever they may do in the convention or elsewhere, they will do nothing for mere theatrical effect.

They will present a substitute for the financial plank of the platform, for free coinage of silver and will consume whatever time may be allowed them for speeches in earnest presentation of their cause.

When the convention refuses to adopt their substitute and accept the gold standard platform, a number of the free silver delegates, especially those from the silver producing States, will simply walk out of the convention and proceed to quarters of their own where they will adopt a protest against the course pursued and appeal to the country for an endorsement of their course.

When this plan shall be put into execution will depend upon when the full committee shall be able to report.

It is not believed that this will be before three or four o'clock today.

It is now probable the silver men will name no candidate for the Presidency.

BADLY SCOOPED.

The United Press Left Far Behind in the Race.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The Times, the United Press paper, published the following this morning:

"The platform is completed. Its contents are unknown. The Platform Committee concluded its labors behind closed doors and did not permit the privilege of the reporters of the United Press to listen to its labors."

The Washington Post, an Associated Press paper, appearing at the same hour, had nearly two columns about the platform, including the preamble and principal planks in full and a good summary of the planks in which there was general interest.

THE DEMOCRATS.

Whitney and Gorman Will Probably Go as Delegates.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

NEW YORK, June 17.—Wm. Whitney did not sail for Europe today as was expected.

In political circles it is reported a change of plan means he will attend the National Convention.

Should he desire it, he could be one of the delegates at large from this State.

GORMAN'S STAND.

BALTIMORE, June 17.—It is asserted here today upon what appears good authority, that Senator Gorman will reconsider his determination not to attend the Democratic National Convention and will go as a delegate at large.

BATES GOES UNDER.

The Principal of the Berkeley Gymnasium Is Heavily Involved.

Attorney Talcott this afternoon filed a petition in insolvency in behalf of George Bates, principal of the Berkeley Gymnasium, at Atherton street, near Alston Way, Berkeley. The liabilities amount to $50,173.17 and the assets to $8533. The assets are bills outstanding against pupils of the institution as tuition. The creditors number about seventy-five and comprise people dealing in all kinds of supplies.

Bates' downfall is said by his attorney to be due to unprofitable and heavy investments in Tehama County in this State and at Wichita, Kansas.

White's Election in the Third Ward Was Va id.

ALAMEDA ALSO SETTLED

Gold Men Are Overwhelming'y Beatene in the Commi.tee on Platform.

AN ANTI-A. P. A. PLANK.

Congressional Nominations in the Third District Postponed to September.

MANY DELEGATES ELECTED.

The Buckleyites Given the Coup de Grace in the Committee Report.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

THE PAVILION, SACRAMENTO, June 17.—The opening of the Democratic State Convention was delayed this morning on account of the Committee on Credentials not being ready to report.

After having taken the Alameda contest under advisement last night, the contest was reopened this morning.

Affidavits were produced from a number of men in San Francisco who asserted that they had been induced by W. W. Foote to go to Alameda to assist him in carrying the primaries. The men assert that without their assistance Foote would have been defeated.

The contest for delegates at large to the Chicago Convention is developing into a bitter fight.

Dimond, who is credited with a desire to defeat Maguire, is said to have requested his friends this morning to support W. W. Foote.

In order to prevent Foote's election Maguire's friends, it is said, will throw their strength to J. V. Coleman.

John H. Hicks, Chairman of the Santa Clara delegation, today received a dispatch from R. D. Murphy of San Jose, requesting him not to place Murphy in nomination for delegate at large in the event of the adoption of a free silver plank by the convention.

WORK STARTS.

The convention assembled at 11:05 o'clock and the committee recommended that in the Alameda Township contest A. R. Baum, G. W. Dennis, J. H. W. Bradley and Fred Wild be seated.

In the Third Ward of Oakland the committee recommended that W. D. White be seated.

The committee reported unanimously in favor of seating the Junta delegation from San Francisco.

A. J. Clunie of San Francisco, holding a proxy from Solano, proposed an amendment to the motion to adopt the Committee's report. He suggested that each member of the contesting delegations be given a half vote. He made a long speech in support of the amendment in which he denied that the delegation of which he is a member is controlled by Buckley and repudiated the statement that the delegation would bolt the Convention regardless of the report of the Committee on Credentials.

Clunie's amendment was lost by an overwhelming vote and the report of the committee seating the Junta delegation was adopted.

THE PLATFORM COMMITTEE.

Chairman Gould appointed the following Committe of Platform and Resolutions after which the Convention took a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon to give the committee an opportunity to prepare a report.

W. A. Alford of Tulare, Chairman; I. S. Hennessy, Nevada; H. C. Gordon, San Joaquin; Gillis Doty, Sacramento; W. W. Foote, Alameda; S. C. Nichols, San Joaquin; J. V. Coleman, San Francisco; Sam Braunhart, San Francisco; A. Camminetti, Amador; E. D. Edwards, Fresno; C. F. Dooling, San Benito; Harry W. Patton, Los Angeles; Raleigh Barker, Solano; D. M. Barker, Orange; C. W. Reed, San Francisco; C. Barbour, San Francisco; M. C. Hassett, San Francisco; E. L. Fitzgerald, Alameda; D. Homald, Colusa; James Colnon, Humboldt; Joseph Hamilton, Placer; T. J. Geary, Sonoma; J. D. Goodwin, Plumas; J. F. Burke, Marin; John McGonigle, Ventura.

The report of the Committee on Permanent Organization making the temporary organization permanent was adopted.

A resolution of respect to the memory of the late Dennis Spencer of Napa was also adopted.

THE PLATFORM.

When the Committee on Resolutions and Platform was called to order, John P. Irish offered a resolution endorsing Cleveland's administration as wise and just and declaring unqualifiedly in favor of gold as a standard. The resolution favored the retirement of small bills and gold below ten dollars so that a proper circulation of silver under that amount could be afforded. It opposed silver at 16 to 1, declaring California wedded to the gold standard.

By a vote of 20 to 4 the resolution was voted down, Burke, Arnold, Reed and Pond voting aye.

W. W. Foote offered the following silver plank: Resolved, That this convention denounces the act of the Republican Congress in demonetizing silver; that we are unalterably in favor of the double standard and of the enactment of such laws as will result in the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the rate of 16 to 1.

On the A. P. A. question Foote offered the following: Resolved, That the Democratic party, loyal to the principles of Americanism established by the founders of the Republic and true to the words and spirit of the American Constitution, declares its opposition to the introduction of any religious tests into our politics to what is known as the American Protective Association.

Sub-committees of five each were appointed to present before the Platform Committee suitable resolutions selected from the many submitted on various important questions.

Planks were prepared endorsing the administration of Cleveland and Budd.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

The Third Congressional Fight Is Postponed to September.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

THE PAVILION, SACRAMENTO, June 17.—The Third Congressional Committee met at 2:30.

Foote called the meeting to order, and Ed Leake of Solano was elected Chairman and Judge A. F. St. Sure of Alameda Secretary.

Foote took the floor and suggested that nominations for Congress be laid over until later. He stated that the Republican Congressional Committee was so divided that it was advisable to await its decision.

Foote amended his motion so that Vallejo be designated as the place of meeting.

A motion to set the date the first Monday in September was adopted.

American Musicians Abroad.

The Parisian public has accorded the warmest reception to Clarence Eddy, the American organist, who has been giving some concerts at the Trocadero. A large number of French organists, among them Theodore Dubo's, the new director of the Paris Conservatory, were present at the opening concert and led the applause. The papers state that Eddy, without doubt, can be classed among the greatest organists of the day, and this is a great confession for the Parisian press to make regarding a foreigner.

A great musical combine is announced from Italy. Ricordi and Sonzogno, the two great music publishers and impresarios, who have been rivals for so long, have pooled their interests. Both houses possess great power in the musical world, and combined they will practically own the Italian opera-houses.

A grand Handel festival was to have taken place at Leipsic this month under the direction of Kertschmer, conductor of the Riedelscher Verein. As the director has fallen very sick, however, the festival has been postponed till next autumn.

Anton Dvorak has not been idle since his return to Europe. It is announced that he has just finished not only two new quartettes for strings, but also three grand symphonic poems, of which the titles are: "The Sorcerer of the South," "The Man of the Waters" and "The Golden W-

My Friend Bogart.

BY THOMAS GAFFNEY TAAFE IN "THE LOOKER ON."

HE was a bashful man, was Bogart, bashful to the last degree—a rare quality, indeed, in one of his profession. Bashful lawyers and white crows are, to my mind, to be placed in the same category. But bashful Bogart certainly was, and abnormally so in the presence of ladies. He couldn't speak a half dozen words to a woman without manifesting an uncontrollable desire to swallow something, and the profusion and duration of his blushes were dangerously suggestive of apoplexy. He was a constant target for our jibes and jests, and an occasion of much polite wonder on the part of all his female acquaintances. These, it must be admitted, were few, for he avoided the sex with a degree of terror that was ludicrous. The sight of a petticoat would throw him into convulsions.

One afternoon in May I dropped into Bogart's office to while away an idle half-hour. This was a common occurrence, as his practice was not large, and he had plenty of time on his hands. As I entered the outer office I was surprised to see the trim figure of a young woman bending over the typewriter. This was certainly startling, as Bogart would not tolerate a female client much less a female employe. I was further mystified by the convulsive grin on the face of his managing clerk, an over-old young man with weak eyes and a generally wilted appearance. A nod from that functionary indicated that Bogart was within, and so, without any ceremony, I proceeded to his sanctum. His desk was in a disorderly condition, a most unusual thing for him. He was crouching, rather sitting in his chair, looking anxious and dishevelled. He looked the picture of abject misery.

"Hullo, old man," I exclaimed, "Busy?"

"Yes—no—that is, not very. Sit down," and he kicked a chair towards me.

"What's up?" I asked after a pause.

"Nothing," he answered, with a start; then he looked out of the window and began to whistle softly. He always whistles and affects an air of nonchalance when least at ease, and I recognized the symptoms.

"Anything the matter?" I again essayed.

"With me? Oh, nothing. Why?" and he tried to look surprised. There was another awkward silence.

"What's new?" he asked.

"Nothing." Then I yawned—he continued to whistle.

"Why don't you tell me to get out if I'm in the way?" I asked, after a pause. He looked at me vacantly without answering, so I rose with the remark: "I guess I'd better go."

"What's the hurry? Sit down," he answered, holding out his hand to grasp mine, "well if you must go, good bye."

I stood a moment without taking his hand, and regarded him steadfastly.

"I was going," I said, "but as you're so infernally anxious to get rid of me, I'll stay."

"Suit yourself," he answered resignedly. "Sit down and make yourself miserable."

"I don't need to," I replied, and added significantly, "here."

There was another painful pause, during which I consumed a cigarette, and he continued to whistle. Then I made another effort.

"Have you finished your business for the day?"

"Yes," he answered, and resumed his whistling.

"Then, let's go home."

"I'd like to go with you, old man, only—" he hesitated and looked towards the door, then leaning towards me, he asked in an awed whisper, "Has she gone?"

"She was there when I came in," I answered. I presumed he referred to the typewriter. He sank back in his chair and groaned. "So that's what's the trouble?" I continued. "Well, what's the matter with her? Isn't she pretty enough?"

"I don't know. I haven't looked at her."

"You haven't looked at her! Why you cold-blooded anchorite, what ails you? If that's all that troubles you, though," I added, reassuringly, as he made no answer, "I can set your mind at rest. She's very pretty. I looked at her as I came in. Dark brown hair, blue eyes, good clear cut features—the chin is rather firm, I though rather determined, but not too—"

"Exactly what I thought," he interrupted. "That's just the trouble."

"But surely you don't object to it. To my mind it's a decided advantage. It's the lack of just that quality of determination that leaves so many women uninteresting."

"It's not a question of any individual quality," he interjected, impatiently, "it's the woman, herself, I object to."

"Then why on earth do you keep her? Why don't you discharge her?"

He looked at me in a helpless way and groaned. It was funny. I lay back in my chair and laughed immoderately.

"It's all very well for you to laugh in that way," he said in an injured tone, "you're not in my predicament."

"But, how came you to engage the girl if you dislike her so?"

"But I didn't engage her, my boy. She engaged herself."

"Oh, come; explain."

"Well, I advertised in this morning's paper for a young man as stenographer and typewriter, and, unfortunately gave my name and address. The first to answer the advertisement was this girl."

"That's interesting. Did she come in disguise?"

"No, confound it."

"Well, when I saw her I was knocked speechless."

"A consummation devoutly—" I began.

"Shut up, will you?" he retorted angrily. "I didn't know what to say. She calmly told me she had come for the position. I reminded her that I had advertised for a young man, and ventured the opinion that she was not of that—well, that persuasion. She promptly replied that she knew it, but wasn't particular—oh, she was very frank about it—said she could do the work better than a man and all that, all things considered, she would prefer to work for a man who was prejudiced against her sex. Then she calmly took off her gloves and hat, asked me what the salary was, and what kind of a typewriter I had, and practically settled herself in the situation before I could put in a word. So here she is, and that's my predicament."

As he finished he turned on me a face expressive of abject misery. I laughed. Then, with a gesture of impatience he turned away and gazed ruefully at his disordered desk—it was usually a model of neatness in its methodical arrangement of books and papers. My laughter was interrupted by a knock at the door and, in response to his nervous summons, she came in. A trim little person, I thought; simply, but tastefully dressed, and air of refinement, and modest reserve tempering her self-reliance, and saving it from becoming offensively aggressive. I thought I detected a twinkle of amusement in her eye as she approached poor Bogart's desk and asked:

"At what hour shall I report tomorrow morning?"

There was not a suggestion of doubt or hesitation in her manner as she spoke, dividing her attention between Bogart and a refractory glove. He blushed to his eyes, fingered his pen for a moment, nervously picked up a paper weight and dropped it on the floor, and, after an ineffectual struggle to swallow something, stammered:

"About—er—nine or—ten, or—er—in fact, Miss—"

"Talcott," she prompted, calmly.

"Oh, yes—er—Miss Talcott—I beg pardon—" then came a frantic effort to recover the paper weight and his breath at the same time, "—in fact—" he had succeeded in both endeavors "in fact—er—whenever it's convenient—whenever it suits you, you know—" then he plunged recklessly at a pile of papers.

"Very well, then, good evening," she replied, and with a slight bow that included both of us she turned and tripped out of the room. As she disappeared Bogart groaned and turned to me.

"That settles it," he said hoarsely. "I've done it, haven't I, old man?"

"You certainly have," I replied. "You've committed yourself now. There's no escape for you."

"So I have. What the devil am I to do?"

"Do! Why, congratulate yourself, to be sure. I wish I were in your place," and I went to the window.

"I wish you were," he answered.

From the window I could see her as she emerged from the building and crossing the street, hailed a car.

"By Jove, she's a neat little thing," I exclaimed, "and perfectly self-posessed. She can cross the street without assistance, and she knows, too, at which corner to stop the car. She's able to take care of herself."

He sat fully five minutes gazing dolefully at his desk, then, with a sigh, he made a desultory effort to establish some order in the chaos of books and papers. Failing, he rose with an imprecation and slammed down the cover of the desk. Then we descended to the street and walked home—that was our custom on fine days—neither speaking a word. He might have been going to the scaffold he was so woe betone, and when I bade him good night at his door, he only groaned and shook his head.

It was a long time before Bogart became reconciled to the situation, and Miss Talcott's presence during that period was a terrible ordeal for him. He would struggle to reach the office before her so as not to be obliged to pass her, and would wait in the evening until Mudge, the weak eyed clerk would signal to him that she had gone, and that the coast was clear. He had not the courage to speak to her, so he laboriously wrote all his letters, and, if it became necessary to have a document typewritten, he would send it to her by Mudge or the office boy. Again and again he bethought him of some scheme to rid himself of her, but as often gave up the idea in despair. Once he conceived the desperate plan of going on a month's vacation and discharging her by letter from the Adirondacks or some such inaccessible refuge, but his courage failed him at the last moment and he abandoned the design.

Gradually, however, he became accustomed to her presence, and his terror at it perceptibly diminished. The awful presence in petticoats began to lose its terrors for him, and one day, filled with a courage of which he hardly thought himself capable, he summoned her to him to dictate a letter to her. But when this step was taken and he heard the rustle of her dress as she seated herself by his side, his heart sank, and he dared not look at her. His memory seemed to fail him, and the words which ordinarily flowed without halt or hesitation, forsook him and left him speechless. He was confused and humiliated, and the effort ended in a sad and pitiful failure. It was a full week before he had the fortitude to try again. By that time the recollection of his first failure had faded away and he had gathered fresh courage, so he made another effort, this time with more success. Elated by this triumph he persisted, following up his first success by repeated assaults and gaining ground at every engagement. Gradually he found himself acquiring confidence, and soon had mastered his shyness to such an extent that he could dictate with perfect equanimity.

One day while she was at work, her note book on her desk, he stole a glance at her. Enlightened at his own temerity he immediately turned his gaze on the ceiling and began to whistle softly. But she did not notice him. Encouraged by her indifference he again cast a surreptitious glance in her direction. Then the fact suddenly dawned on him that she was pretty and, strange to say, he confessed to an unmistakeable sensation of pleasure at the discovery. He was startled as well as pleased, for he had never looked a woman in the face before. He had often seen pictures of beautiful women—in the illustrated papers, in photographic collections, in the art galleries—but it was another thing to look at one in the flesh, to be speaking to her, to be near enough to touch her. The thought of his situation almost took his breath away.

Then he found himself wondering what her voice was like. Of course, he had heard it more than once, but the circumstances had been such that he had paid no attention to it. Now he listened to it, and found, to his pleasure as well as surprise, that it was sweet and musical. He would ask her to repeat portions of the letters he was dictating only to hear it, and would make desperate efforts to draw her into conversation that he might listen to it and watch the play of her features at the same time. But, like most men afflicted with abnormal shyness, he was singularly barren of ideas, and his efforts to overcome her reserve were fruitless. Like many another man so situated he then resorted to the device of planning out conversations and posting himself on certain subjects beforehand and then endeavoring to lead up to them in conversation; but he was no diplomat and if his memory did not fail him at the last moment his self possession did and left him in as bad a plight as ever. It galled him too, to hear her, through the open door, prattling away to Mudge; and he wondered why she could not draw her out as well.

But persistent, untiring assault will eventually beat down the most stubborn resistance, and soon he began to feel that he was gaining ground. Slowly she yielded to his persevering efforts, and the barrier between them gradually melted away. She would chat pleasantly with him and meet all his advances half way. His elation at his success knew no bounds. He soon found himself looking anxiously for her every morning, dreaming about her, repeating her name softly to himself and doing other irrational things. He would take lonely trips to the seashore, and long walks into the suburbs, and would spend his evenings and his Sundays alone, dreaming about her. He ascertained where she lived, and often in his walks—accidentally, of course,—would find himself in the vicinity of her home.

He did not understand what it all meant, until one morning the consciousness burst upon him with the suddenness of the traditional thunderbolt, that he was in love. He scouted the idea at first, and tried to convince himself that he was mistaken. What! he in love—he, who so cordially disliked the society of women, who shunned them as persistently as ordinary politeness would permit, who could not speak a dozen consecutive, coherent words to a woman; it was preposterous—and he laughed, and ridiculed the idea. But the truth, with that pertinacity which is one of its most striking characteristics, would not down, and he was forced eventually to acknowledge it.

CHAPTER II.

Here I must record an unusual phenomenon. With the realization of this sudden turn of affairs came a return of his old reserve, so that, just as their relations had begun to assume a semblance of cordiality, a new barrier seemed to rise between them. He would look forward, as before, to a pleasant tete-a-tete, when she would come to his desk, note book in hand, to receive his dictations; but, as in the earlier days, his courage would forsake him, and he would hardly be able to dispose of the business in hand. Sometimes, when he had really nothing for her to do, he would call her, with the intention of engaging her in conversation, but would falter at the last moment, and, to save himself from an embarassing situation, would dictate a rambling, incoherent letter to one John Smith, the inventive faculty, even in regard to names, was sadly undeveloped in him.

She of course noticed all this—she would have been blind and deaf if she had not—and, being a woman, she divined the truth. How the discovery affected her, I am not prepared to say. A man's imagination, even a vigorous and fertile one, has its limitations, and these he is most likely to realize when he attempts to account for a woman's actions or fathom her motives. All I know is that Bogart's sudden relapse into his former manner seemed to cause her, as well it might, first surprise, and then annoyance. Whether this was due to the consciousness that he was in love with her; or the fact that, being in love, he had not the courage to say so, I am not prepared to decide. I am content to note the fact that she assumed once more her quondam habit of reserve, showing no emotion at his frequent manifestations of embarassment, except, perhaps, an occasional sign of irritation.

Bogart's condition meantime became more and more aggravated. The longer he deferred the task of unbosoming himself, the more he yearned to speak; and the stronger his yearning grew, the greater grew his terror at the prospect. He began to neglect himself in many ways. He hardly ate or drank. He refused to indulge in any rational enjoyment. He was unable to sleep and spent his nights walking up and down his room. So day by day he let his opportunities slip from him and his goal seemed farther away than ever.

This was the state of affairs when, returning one day from court in his customary mood, he met a young man coming from his office. At another time he would have paid no attention to the circumstance, but as he then was he looked with suspicion on everybody he met, and especially on strangers who approached his office. This man certainly was not a client, unless a new one, which was the least of many possibilities. He did not look like a book agent, although he carried a small leather satchel. Bogart was still revolving these suspicions in his mind when he reached his door. On entering he noticed that Miss Talcott was alone. As she looked up, and her eyes met his, he blushed and passed hurriedly into his private office. He tried to give his attention to his work but to no purpose. That stranger, with his handsome face, would thrust himself in the way until, in sheer desperation, he determined on a bold step to rid himself of what might be, after all, a groundless jealousy. So he raised his voice, and called:

"Miss Talcott." Of course, he added to himself, the fellow came on some business. What foolishness this is. "Did that gentleman," he continued aloud, as Miss Talcott entered, "wish—er—to see me—er—personally?"

"No, sir," she answered, calmly.

"Oh—of course not—" he stammered. "But Mr. Mudge was not in. Were—um—were you able to—er—tell him what he wanted—er—to know?"

"Yes, sir," as calmly as before.

"Well—a—hum—well, what did he—did he want, Miss Talcott?"

"He wanted to see me," was the answer with the emphasis on the "me" and a snap of the firm jaws that seemed calculated to silence all further questioning.

"Oh," gasped poor Bogart, and his chair, which he had tilted nervously backward, came down with a crash. He felt the blood rush to face and only able to gasp: "I—I beg your pardon," and plunged recklessly into his papers. He was too confused to see the smile of satisfaction which lighted up her face as she went back to her machine, and, if he had, he would hardly have known how to interpret it.

This was the commencement of a season of indescribable torment for Bogart. That stranger's face danced continually before his eyes; multiplied a hundred-fold, it peopled all his dreams—it filled his waking thoughts; it threatened to drive him insane.

To aggravate the matter a few days after this occurrence, he found in the morning mail a letter addressed in a strong masculine hand, to Miss Talcott. Thereafter, at varying intervals—once, twice or even three times a week—letters in the same handwriting would arrive. Bulky letters they were too, as if the writer had much to say, or, at least, required many words in which to say it. He hated the sight of them, and the temptation to burn them was more than once upon him. He would turn them over and over in his hand and seek to descry in the handwriting characteristics by which he might connect them with the stranger. But suddenly a ray of hope burst upon him. Might not this mysterious rival be, after all, only her brother. At the thought he laughed, and ridiculed his suspicions. Then, in view of the voluminous letters, the utter improbability of such a solution presented itself to him and he was plunged again in despair.

About a month after his first meeting with the stranger he was again coming through the hall when his door opened and, as before, the hated rival stepped forth, and, with that brisk and business-like air that so irritated Bogart, walked past him and started down the stairs. The sight of the stranger stirred up all the bitterness that had been brewing for the last month, and it was with difficulty he resisted an impulse to run after his rival and push him down the stairs. But he did resist it, and, with an air of enforced calm entered the office. Miss Talcott was out, and he was conscious of a feeling of exultation at the other fellow's disappointment. Then a brilliant scheme suggested itself to him. He would settle his doubts at once—he would find out who this mysterious stranger was—he would know whether or not he was right in his surmise. When she returned a half-hour later he called her to him and began: "Miss Talcott,"—he was trembling violently and he could feel a cold perspiration breaking out all over him—"did—er—did Mudge tell you—er—did he give you a message?"

"No, sir," she answered.

"Oh, he forgot it, perhaps—er—ask him about it. Your brother was here, you know"—he tried to look searchingly at her but his gaze faltered even more than his speech.

"My brother?" with a rising inflection, and an inquiring look in the wide eyes.

"Oh, I beg pardon," he stammered, isn't he—I mean—er—your"—he was going to say "father" at a venture, but checked himself in time; then he thought of substituting "uncle," but decided that that would be rather improbable, and ended ignominiously with—"I mean the gentleman who—who was here the other day, you know."

"Oh," she exclaimed, with a laugh and a sharp glance at him, "you mean Mr. Curtis." Bogart was not too embarrassed to make a mental note of the name—"thank you, sir." Then, with a smile, she returned to the outer office, leaving him to his reflections.

As the door closed behind her poor Bogart sank back in his chair, a picture of abject, inconsolable misery. His worst fears were realized, there could no longer be any doubt. She was slipping away from him—he was giving her up without a struggle to this other fellow. At the thought of his rival he gnashed his teeth, and, springing to his feet, paced angrily up and down the little office.

And so passed another week of misery for poor Bogart. He tried to forget her, but could not; he tried to shut out the memory of his discomfiture, but failed ignominiously. The face of his rival was ever present to his mental vision, taunting him with his defeat, and driving him almost to desperation. And, as if to aggravate this feeling of chagrin, on looking up one day from his work, at the sound of a strange voice, he saw the hated Curtis bending over her typewriter desk, laughing and chatting gaily with her. He angrily ordered Mudge to shut the door, saying that there was a draught and behind that protecting screen he vented his wrath on his unresisting books and papers.

But he did not give up yet. That hope which springs eternal sustained him. Full of desperate resolve, he determined to make one more effort. It was a forlorn hope, and he hardly dared dream of success. In spite of the apparent futility of the project, however, he decided to gather all his forces, and make another attack on the citadel of her heart. He would inveigle her into conversation, lead adroitly up to the subject, and spring the momentous question at the most favorable opportunity. This was his plan, but he had made such plans before, alas! how often. However, he felt that it was his last chance, and went at it determined to do or die. Full of this high purpose, he summoned her one day to his desk, and, clearing out his throat, prepared for the ordeal. As she approached, he bent his gaze industriously on a magazine, which he held in his hand, and pretended not to see her. She spoke to him, and he looked up.

"Oh, it's you, Miss Talcott!" he exclaimed, with poorly affected surprise. "Excuse me—a—a—I didn't notice you. I was interested in a story in a—a story—here—" he laughed an embarrassed little laugh. "It was about a fellow, you know, who was in love—and—and—he was so bashful he was afraid to tell the girl. Funny, wasn't it?"

She made no answer.

"Do you," he resumed, nervously, "I—I felt sorry for the poor dev—I beg pardon—the poor fellow. I don't know why."

"Perhaps," she suggested, "it was a fellow feeling."

"Dear me, no," he said, with a start, "I—I'm not bashful—not at all."

"No?" turning her eyes full on him. "Nor in love, either?"

He flushed as he met her gaze and his heart sank. Pushing back his chair, he rose, and walked towards the window, whistling softly; then suddenly he began to dictate one of those long, rambling John Smith letters that were so often written, but never mailed. When she had gone out, and closed the door behind her he threw up his hands, and gave himself over to despair. His last effort had failed, and misery, of which there is no telling, was his. He had been too much embarrassed to notice the look of grim determination on her face as she left him, and in the outer office Mudge was too far from her to hear what she muttered to herself, as she bent over her desk; but he saw her close up her typewriter with a determined air, and turn her attention to writing a letter. This done, she folded and sealed it, and placed it in her reticule, closing the clasp with a determined snap that made Mudge jump in his chair. It was evident that a crisis was at hand.

The next morning as Bogart approached the office, he saw her before him and slackened his pace so as not to overtake her. He had not the courage to meet her eyes and waited until she had entered before he followed her. She was standing beside her desk taking off her gloves when he opened the door. She had not yet removed her hat, and he thought she never looked prettier. He flushed as he passed her and averted his gaze.

In the mail which had been placed on his desk, was a letter for her, and a glance at the superscription told him whence it came. The handwriting was as familiar as his own. He longed to tear it up and consign it to the waste-basket, but restrained himself. He looked up and saw that she had followed him into the private office, and was standing by his desk, respectfully awaiting an opportunity to address him. At the sight of her he shrank involuntarily into his chair. He handed her the letter that had aggravated him so much, and waited in evident embarrassment for her to go. She stood for a moment looking at the missive, but without opening it. His agitation was rapidly becoming more marked.

"Mr. Bogart," she commenced, with a slight hesitation in her speech and manner, "I suppose I ought to tell you that I am going to leave you in about two weeks."

"Wha—what?" he gasped; then after looking at her for a moment, he asked: "Why, Miss Talcott?" with a vague misgiving that his action of yesterday had something to do with her departure.

"Well, sir," she answered shyly, "the fact is, I'm going to get married."

Bogart dropped the book which, in his nervousness, he had picked up, and stared at her almost in terror.

"Going—to be—married!" he gasped. Then, after a pause, he added, meekly, and with a note of despair in his voice that was almost ludicrous, "To—to Mr. Curtis?"

"To Mr. Curtis," she assented calmly.

Bogart was rapidly losing control of himself. This was not unusual, but he was doing it now in a way that was rare for him.

"No," he exclaimed, excitedly, "you must not, Miss Talcott, you must not."

"Sir!" she exclaimed.

"You must not," he continued, rising from his chair, his agitation increasing, "not until I have told you all that has been in my heart and almost on my lips for these many months." And then and there he plunged into a passionate avowal of his love for her; he told her of his fruitless efforts to unbosom himself to her; he pleaded, protested, entreated. In his excitement all his shyness and all his reserve were cast aside, and on the impulse of the moment he was accomplishing that at which he had failed after months of careful, method cal planning, and systematic rehearsing. His fervor lent an eloquence to his tongue that it had never known before. He forgot that he was talking to another man's promised wife, and assured her again and again that she was all the world to him, and so on and so on, in the same old time-honored strain. She did not check him as it might be expected she would, and as he finished she turned towards him. Her face was flushed, and her hand trembled slightly as she laid it on his.

"Mr. Bogart," she said, earnestly, "do you mean that?"

"I do," he answered, fervently, "every word. If I could call you my wife I would be the happiest man alive."

"Then," she said, simply, "I am yours."

For a moment he was staggered, then without a word, without a thought for the man whose place he was taking, he clasped her in his arms. And then—well, she laughed and said her new hat was crushed beyond recognition; and he said it didn't matter—he'd buy her a half-dozen. Then he recollected the other fellow and asked, with a guzzled look:

"But what'll Curtis do?"

"Curtis?" she answered, smiling, "who is Curtis?"

"The man you were going to marry."

"There is no Curtis," she replied, "and if there were, I wouldn't marry him."

"But you told me—you said"—he was losing his self-control again—"who is that strange young man I met here several times?"

"He?" Oh he came to repair the typewriter; I don't know his name. And the letters," she added, with a laugh, "I wrote myself."

"But what—what does it all mean?" he stammered in bewilderment.

"Listen," she said with sudden earnestness, laying her hand on his arm, "and if you really mean what you have just said you will not think the less of me for what I have done. I knew from the first how you felt towards me—oh! trust a woman to find out a thing like that—and I, well—" she paused and laughed. She was blushing and her blushes became her. "I saw, though," she continued, "that the knowledge of your love unnerved you, and left you unable to say what you were dying to tell me. So I—well, I helped," and she looked up at him and laughed again. "Jealousy, you know, will make even a bashful man speak. And now—" the remainder of her speech was smothered into an inarticulate murmur, and Mudge, who came in unannounced at this moment, stopped with a gasp, blinked once or twice, and precipitately retreated.

And yet there are those who doubt that love will find a way.

WEDNESDAY..... JUNE 17, 1896.

Barney Barnato who went to the jail in Pretoria with a check for half a million of dollars to pay the fines of the four reformers, probably knew the value of his men in relation to mining interests. But when he reached the jail, some one else knew their value, and had stepped in and paid the fines. What a fine thing it is to be appreciated in that way, when one is in Boer Barney with half a million freely tendered, would be called a brick, even among the stolid Dutch of Pretoria.

The sugar King, However, recently undertook to import pheasants' eggs from England to be hatched artificially to stock his game preserves in New Jersey. But he could not get them past the custom house. Not even the sweetness of sugar could prevail. The New York Collector read for the instruction of the game bird man this section of the law: "Eggs of birds, fish, and insects free; provided, however, that this shall not be held to include the eggs of game birds, the importation of which is prohibited except for scientific collection." And now the Department at Washington is asked to rule on the question whether the restriction does not apply solely to the eggs of game chickens?

A contributor to the Philadelphia Times traces the origin of the rubber tire to a Belfast doctor in 1888. He conceived the idea of taking a piece of garden hose, wrapping it around the wheel of his son's bicycle, welding the two ends together with melted rubber and thus forming the first pneumatic tire. This gave a cushion to the periphery of the bicycle and made its mounting of obstacles easy and cushion-like. Dunlop had a friend in the person of a well-to-do Irishman named Harvey Du Cros, who abandoned the business he was engaged in and risked his wealth in the formation of a company that had for its object the exploitation of a pneumatic tire for a bicycle. It was capitalized at $'00,000, and fifteen months later—that was in the early part of 1891—it declared a dividend of 10 per cent, or $10,000 in all, and added $10,000 to its surplus fund. Two years later that same company declared a dividend of $2 500,000. One year ago the rights of that organization were sold to a British syndicate for $15 000,000 and the purchasing party capitalized the company at $20,000,000 and openly asked for subscriptions to that amount. The proffers were nearly three times the amount of the capital stock. In Belfast at one bank alone, where books were opened, $1,000,000 was subscribed in less than three hours.

The Danger of Stopping Over.

Senator White, who has just returned to California, was interviewed on his way home at the town of Gallup in New Mexico. If the interviewer has reported him correctly, Senator White made the following declaration:

"I would be heartily in favor of amending the constitution so as to give Congress power to impose a tax upon all incomes. The decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax bill I regard as a great misfortune, not only because of its direct bearing upon the problem of raising revenue, but because it reversed the precedents of a century and discredits the court itself. The dissenting opinions of White and Harlan seem to me unanswerable. After that first decision I would not have voted for an income tax of any sort that could be drawn in conformity with the doctrine laid down by the court. A just income tax is needed to provide reserve, and I think the people generally are in favor of such methods of raising money to meet the expenses of the government."

There is a flavor of old Bourbonism in this declaration. There never was the least occasion for an income tax in these last days. A more unpopular law was never placed for a time on the statute book. If the tariff had been let alone, the revenue would have been sufficient without the aid of any income tax. The latter was a free trade measure. It was introduced to bridge over a financial crisis brought on by the supporters of that law. It was a good day when the Supreme Court knocked that measure on the head. If is an evil day for any politician who has learned so little since that event, as to shoot off his mouth in favor of a dead proposition.

An Appeal to the Country.

The Republican platform is the full and explicit declaration of principles which will govern the next administration. It is an appeal to the country for its sanction. There is hardly a doubt as to the result. It keeps nothing back. The Republicans have never made any concealments of a national policy. On the two great issues, finance and protection, it stands by the principles which have guided the party since it came into existence. It is the champion of American industry. The platform reviews in substance, the outline of that policy. It is squarely for a national revenue ample for all needs to be raised by a tariff. It is for sound money represented by gold, silver and paper.

The Republican platform is a declaration of American policy as against a foreign one. It will not suit the English and other free traders who have been striving for years to obtain control of the home market. The Republican policy has never suited foreigners. They have always railed against it. There is nothing so complimentary to that policy as foreign denunciation. The home market is first and last for Americans. All the range of industries is to be fostered and encouraged by the government.

It is a remarkable circumstance that just as the declaration for sound money was enunciated at St. Louis, President Cleveland was in effect, making an appeal to the Democratic party soon to be represented in the Chicago Convention, to make a similar declaration. He could not believe that his own party was about to desert him in this last extremity. But there is every prospect that his entreaties will be of no avail, and that sound money will have no place in the Democratic platform. It is well that the battle should be fought out on such a distinct issue.

The Republican platform is an aggressive one. It is a tremendous indictment of the present administration. It charges to that account the calamities that have ever taken the country. "It has been a record of unparalleled incapacity, dishonor, and disaster." This declaration does not need any qualifications. It has crippled American industry and stimulated foreign production. It has borrowed money and created a large public debt in time of peace. It has destroyed business confidence and created distress in all the industrial ranks of the country. This is the sum of the indictment.

The Republican party points to the record for thirty years for a vindication. In all that time there was never such a paralysis of business, nor such an army of laborers out of employment. What it has done for the country in the past, it promises to do in the future. It will restore business confidence by a steadfast adherence to the principles set forth in the platform, which are none other than those which have been incorporated in its entire history. It will also maintain a vigorous foreign policy. It will recognize the cause of the Cuban patriots and will unfurl the American flag in Hawaii. The force and directness of Blaine will be felt once more in all the foreign relations of the country. It has been waiting for this new inspiration. It will revive the hopes of the nation. The platform faces a crisis in the industrial affairs of the country. It is the declaration of a party which, to all appearances, will in a few months control the administration of the country.

The Bolters and the Bolted.

There is a great deal of talk in these days about bolters who will bolt from the two great political parties, if the platforms don't happen to suit them. Speculations have been rife as to the strength of the gold element who will bolt from the Chicago Convention in case the silver men make the platform; —the number and influence of the men who will bolt from the Republican Convention if the gold men make the platform.

These threatened movements have probably been over estimated. When a Republican for instance, bolts because he cannot have every expression of a platform to suit him, he will generally find short commons every where else. He does not carry any great amount of strength with him. The bolt generally hurts him much more than it hurts the party. There is room enough in the Republican party for men of all shades of opinion touching financial questions. They have the utmost liberty of thought and action. There is the same room in the Democratic party.

The men who bolt never find things to their mind or the outside. A few bolters never disrupt a great party. Their influence is generally greatly over estimated. It is especially so in these days when there are so many who assume that bolting means the defeat of either of the leading parties. It means nothing of the kind.

Gen. Francis A. Walker, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has contributed a very suggestive paper to the June number of the Atlantic Monthly on the "Dangers of Immigration." He points out among other things the complete exhaustion of the public lands: "Fifty years ago a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres could be had at the minimum price of $1.25 an acre, or for merely the fees of registeration. Under these circumstances it was a very simple matter to dispose of a large immigration. Today there is not a good farm within the limits of the United States which is to be had on these conditions. The wild and tumultuous scenes which attended the opening to settlement of the territory of Oklahoma a few years ago, and, a little later, of the so-called Cherokee strip testify eloquently to the vast change in our national conditions in this respect."

He points out that between 1880 and 1890 five and one quarter millions of foreigners entered our ports. These have brought on a crisis in the labor market:

"No nation in human history ever undertook to deal with such masses of alien population. That man must be a sentimentalist and an optimist beyond all bounds of reason who believes that we can take such a load upon the national stomach without a failure of assimilation, and without great danger to the health and life of the nation. For one, I believe it is time that we should take a rest, and give our social, political, and industrial system some chance to recuperate. The problems which so sternly confront us today are serious enough without being complicated and aggravated by the addition of some millions of Hungarians, Bohemians, Poles, South Italians and Russian Jews."

Now and then sentimental women think it a nice thing to sympathize with murderers and criminals. Scott Jackson, the murderer of Pearl Bryan, has been sentenced to be hanged for one of the most brutal crimes on record. A teacher in one of the Public Schools of Newport, Ky., where the crime was committed, sent presents to the murderer. The Board of Education of that city has refused to re-employ her in the schools. A young woman who indulges in such a sickly sentimentality is unfit to teach in any public school.

That kind old pork-packer is now very sorry that he contributed to Mrs. Carter's theatrical education. He was bled to the tune of about $20,000, when he was sued for $65,0000. Fairbanks had only a platonic interest in the woman. He thought she might make a star actress. Belasoko the go between, did his best to make Fairbanks a star financial performer.

It costs one dollar a ton to transport iron ore and other metal freights from the head of Lake Superior to Cleveland—which fact has induced John D. Rockefeller to make plans for the establishment of a great metal plant at Cleveland. The difference in freight between Pittsburgh and Cleveland from Lake Superior is 75 cents a ton.

On a Stocked Stream.

I had just got my rod together, and was hooking on a worm when the owner of the brook, a sturdy and somewhat ill-looking farmer, appeared on the bank beside me. I offered a short salutation, and received one in return considerably shorter than my own.

"Any trout in this brook?" I asked.

"Chuck full on 'um."

"You allow fishing here, of course?"

"Yaas, ef the pay is all right.

"How much?"

"Five dollars a trip, now she's stocked."

"Oh, she's stocked, is she? Well I'll give you $5; in advance too."

He pocketed the money, and I swashed down the brook, a basketful of half-pounders swimming before my dazzled vision. In the first three miles the only bite I had was from my coat pocket. I spent an hour casting in "The Pool," another one through "The Cut" and finished out the afternoon skirmishing around the shores of the "Pond." Then night came on, and I was glad. If ever I have an evil deed to perform, anything like murdering an able-bodied farmer, I prefer to do it after dark. On my way to the station I stopped at the house of the farmer and inquired for him.

"Pa's gone tur the village," said the boy; "he got some money turday, so he's gone over tur git some groceries."

"Your father told me the brook was stocked," I said fiercely.

"So 'tis."

"I don't believe there's a trout in it over an inch long."

"I don't nuther," said the boy; "pa didn't stock it tell las' summer."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Bill's Golden City.

In front of a Dakota sod cabin sat a man about 50 years old, who was ragged and forlorn and hungry looking. A few rods away lay the dead body of a mule, and beyond that was a wagon with a broken wheel. There was no smoke coming out of the cabin chimney, no fowls or live stock about, and no other human being to be seen.

"Well," queried the man as I looked about, "things look sorter lonesome, eh?"

"Indeed they do sir. What's been the matter with you?"

"Billyus fever."

"Where is the wife?"

"Inside the house with the same thing."

"And the children?"

"Out thar' behind the haystack shakin' with the ager."

"I see you've lost your mule?"

"Died two day ago, sir. Can't rightly say what ailed him, but he's gone."

"I suppose you are dead broke on top of all?" I queried.

"Havn't got a red cent, sir, and nuthin' but cornmeal in the house," he replied.

"Well, I don't blame you for feeling blue over the situation."

"Who's a feelin' blue?"

"Why, I expect you are."

"Then you make a big mistake, stranger. Thing did look a leetle blue last week, but three days ago I had this 'ere farm cut up into 200 town lots and arranged with a critter to boom it, and I'm feelin' like a steer in a cornfield. Two thousand lots at $100 apiece, six railroads to cross town, three big carworks acomin', schools, churches, factories, parks, hotels —why durn my hide, but I jist sot here calkelatin' on startin' five banks and foundin' six or three orphans asylums with my money!"

"Then I can't aid you?"

"Jist a pipe o' terbacker and a nip of whiskey, stranger, and you tell everybody down the road that ole Bill Johnson has founded the town o' Golden City and is goin' to plant gold watches for mile posts all over the stait. Feelin' blue? Waal, I sh uld rayther guggle to observe that he ha to keep hold of the grass to prevent him flyin away for joy and exultashun!"

NOTES AND EXCERPTS.

A firm of New York watchmakers recently filled an order for a watch for Nicholas II. They have received a letter from him acknowledging the receipt of the watch and saying that he is highly pleased with it. The watch is of the open-face pattern, and has a split-second attachment and a calendar of the moon and sun. The calendar is perpetual, and makes allowances for short months and leap years. It has five small dials distributed about the large dial. The back of the case is elaborately decorated with the imperial crown surmounting the Czar's monogram.

A touching account is given by the friends of Sir John Millais of the distinguished painter's state. He cannot speak, and can only communicate with those around him by writing. But in spite of all that he is suffering he keeps his good spirits wonderfully, never loses his patience and is at all times full of thought for those around him. Indeed, it is said that hardly one of his written communications to the watchers by his bed has any reference to himself or his own wants. It is always of others that he seems to be thinking.

Mr. Gladstone has simplified matters for his biographer by carefully assorting and arranging his correspondence. He has selected 60,000 letters for publication, and has built a fireproof room for their safe keeping.

The life of Thomas Hughes was divided between politics, literature and the law. He had, moreover, strong religious interests. In the best sense of the term he was a many-sided man and his death has evoked many estimates of his work in half a dozen different directions.

Ex-Secretary Whitney is said to have remarked to an old college friend the other day, apropos of his refusal to be considered a presidential candidate, that he "would rather be called Bill Whitney than President Whitney." He enjoys his freedom and friends better than fuss and feathers.

Senator Blackburn of Kentucky carries no less than three rabbits' feet for luck, and especially to protect him from the insidious wiles of the gold bugs.

A dealer in men's furnishing goods in one of the large Eastern cities furnishes indisputable proof of the growth and magnitude of the bicycle craze. Although his display of walking sticks was never finer with the latest devices in whangee and other woods, he says they are a drug on the market. His trade in canes for the last month fell off 75 per cent, which he thinks is altogether due to the fact that so many well-dressed men ride the bicycle, and of course they have no use for canes.

The children at Bethlehem are told by their mothers that on Christmas eve a choir of angels always sing above the place where Christ was born. Travelers say that on this evening scores and sometimes hundreds of children may be seen in the open air, looking up into the sky, waiting to hear the angels sing.

Elisee Reclus having proposed that a globe 418 feet in diameter be built somewhere as an exact model of the earth, Alfred Wallace suggests as an improvement that the globe be concave and all the details be looked at from the inside.

As warden of a women's prison and as prison commissioner, Mrs. Ellen C. Johnson has served in Massachusetts for nearly twenty years. She is said to exert a remarkable influence over the women prisoners and in many cases has reformed them.

In the Jungle Book Rudyard Kipling puts in the mouth of Mowgli, the man-cub, a serving oath—"By the bull that redeemed me!" A contemporary thinks that Kipling must have picked this up in Vermont. Matthew Lyon, the Irishman whom that State sent to Congress and who had a fight in front of the Speaker's desk with our Mr. Griswold, came to this country as a "redemptioner." His first master, a Connecticut farmer, traded him off to a Vermonter for a pair of horned critters; and Lyon's pet oath in later life was, "By the bulls that redeemed me."

Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria is not allowed to fix the order of the toasts at the royal dinner parties in his own palace. The Czar of Russia is not an easy boss.

Two cynical traditions about women, one that she is stingy and the other that she cannot keep a secret, have been dispelled by the action of Mrs. Brinckerhoff, who gave $ 00,000 to Barnard College and kept it a secret.

A correspondent who recently visited the Empress Eugenie contradicts the reports as to her ill health. The Empress, who is now 70, was looking exceedingly well and very handsome for a woman of her years. Her features still preserve their clear-cut beauty. Her eyes are bright and her hair which is quite white, adds much to her air of distinction. Like Queen Victoria she has not put aside her mourning, and probably never will, but the crepe is less depressingly deep, and she sometimes wears a small bunch of violets fixed at her collar.

A South African millionaire gave a dinner in London recently, at which every lady was presented at dessert with a large uncut diamond from the South African mine in which the millionaire was interested.

Kipling's Australian Policy.

Rudyard Kipling, says Current Literature, gives out this explanation of the statement in an Australian newspaper that "Rudyard Kipling landed on this island at 12 o'clock and at 12.16 o'clock he had formulated an Australian policy." "A young reporter cornered me just after I landed. I treated him kindly but said firmly that I was not to be interviewed. 'I have not thought of interviewing you,' replied the reporter, with a sadness in his voice; 'I ask a much greater favor than that.'" It turned out that the reporter had an Australian policy that he knew would be of the greatest benefit to the country. No paper would print it. His modest request was that Kipling would let him put forth his theory as the scheme of the novelist. "They will print it," he said, "if I give it as coming from you." "All right," agreed Kipling, "fire ahead." So the young reporter got in four mortal columns telling the people of Australia how to run the country. "I never read the article," said Kipling; "but there must have been amazing theories in it from the storm it raised."

CAPITAL STOCK.....$100,000
1000 shares at $100 each, payable at $1 per month upon each share. The most simple plan in the world to make money with practically no risk.
PURPOSE OF ORGANIZATION.
The California Investment Company is organized for the benefit of all its stockholders, and not for the purpose of bestowing wealth and power on a favored few, also to enable small investors to combine and gain equal advantages with capitalists in making investments, to buy, sell and deal in Real Estate, to borrow and make loans, and to provide for a life income during one's later years.
AN OPPORTUNITY FOR SMALL INVESTORS.
The California Investment Company is organized for giving parties of small capital an opportunity for a safe and profitable investment, those who can spare but a few dollars at a time have long to wait before they can save enough to buy a lot and then they have to pay the retail price, which is much greater than that which land can be purchased for in large tracts. By depositing a few dollars with the California Investment Company you will place it where it will be combined for your benefit, with the money of others like yourselves. The Company purchases property at wholesale prices, then subdivides and sells the same at retail prices. Money invested where property is rapidly increasing in value will some time double and in all cases will bring a larger return than interest.
The California Investment Company desires to call your attention to their most simple co-operative system for making money. The plan of investing in the Company is the most simple in the world. The value of one share is one hundred dollars, payable at one dollar per month, no more, no less. This money is paid into the treasury of the Company and invested by the Board of Directors who are selected by the Stockholders once a year.
"In Union there is Strength," any person investing money in the California Investment Company will receive more profits from the amount paid in than any investment they can make. It is only by the combination of your savings with those of others that your money is given power equal to that of all millionaires.
In these exceptionally bad times it is gratifying to know that there is still left an opportunity to make money and especially at this present time the California Investment Company believes now is the time to invest.
It is useless to say to you that in order for the California Investment Company to secure success, great experience, tact, judgment and discretion are necessary. All of these most important elements are intrusted to representative business men of this city who compose the Board of Directors.
Correspondence Solicited.

THE MARSH IS DOOMED

West Oakland's Enterprising Citizens Are at Work.

All Is Finally Arranged for the Reclamation of a Section.

The West Oakland Improvement Club met at Hansen's Hall last evening and listened to an address by Captain John Hackett of the Pacific Coast Reclamation & Dredging Company. Captain Hackett is a member of the club and made a strong speech in favor of further improvements in West Oakland. He stated his interests in and about West Oakland are extensive and it was his opinion that his dredger will not leave West Oakland after filling in the depression from Pine to Sixteenth street but will continue work until the entire marsh is filled in.

He congratulated the club on being one of the most active and energetic organizations that he was ever connected with and said it was a God send to West Oakland. The captain also stated that the Southern Pacific Company had informed him of its willingness to do all in its power to improve West Oakland.

The club has collected the necessary amount of money to fill in a depression at the head of Pine street and Captain Hackett will soon put his dredger to work there.

The following communication was sent by the club to F. S. Douty, manager of the Pacific Improvement Company.

West Oakland, June 16, 1896

Mr. F. S. Douty, Manager Pacific Improvement Company, S. P. Co. Building, corner Market and Montgomery streets, San Francisco. Dear Sir—The necessary money required for the "filling in" of a portion of the depression corner Pine and Lincoln streets, West Oakland has been collected and is now in the hands of the club and awaits your pleasure.

Very truly yours,

R. J. Fenelon Admitted to Citizenship by Judge Ogden.

R J Fenelon, a native of Ireland, was admitted to citizenship this morning, having passed a fine examination before Judge Ogden.

At the close of the examination on the constitution, Judge Ogden said

You have relatives subject to the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. If your brother should be called upon to defend that monarchy and it should be necessary for this country to fight England could you fight against England although you knew that you were fighting against your brother?"

Yes" was the reply

"Do you think you could fight with all your heart if you knew you were fighting against your brother and against England?"

"I could"

"And you would do it?"

"I would"

"Very well then I will swear you" said the judge, and Fenelon became an American

The Curtis Case.

Thomas F Agnew Jr this morning in the Police Court told on the stand substantially the same facts as set forth in the affidavit filed yesterday in which he charged Officer Curtis with trying to induce him to serve as a juror in a Chinese lottery case and vote for conviction. ## AMUSEMENTS.

The Nobles Have a Drawing-Card at the Oakland.

An enthusiastic audience greeted the Nobles company last night at the Oakland Theater.

"Love and Law" is brim full of good comedy, exciting situations, thrilling climaxes, entertaining dialogue and repartee. It is not a blood-curdling nor impossible play, on the contrary, there is nothing of the blood-and-thunder nature about it.

Mr. and Mrs. Nobles made a most emphatic hit in their respective role—Mr. Nobles as the comical Irish lawyer and Mrs. Nobles as "Rita," the Italian street singer. The other members of the company were all well cast and played their parts to the entire satisfaction of every one present. Judging from the enthusiasm displayed last night, "Love and Law" will do even a larger business than "From Sire to Son." It is a far more lively play and the scenes and incidents follow each other in rapid succession.

NAT GOODWIN.

An important attraction is announced for next Monday and Tuesday evenings in the engagement of the eminent comedian, Nat C. Goodwin.

"In Mizzoura" will be presented the opening night, in which Mr. Goodwin will be seen in the role of Jim Radburn. Tuesday evening Henry Guy Carleton's great success, "A Gilded Fool," will be produced. The sale of seats begins next Thursday evening.

To enjoy a pleasant evening take the California Railway to Leona Heights, and return.

GARDNER IS SAFE.

Failure of Mayor Davie's Attempts to Depose the Police Clerk.

The Mayor has made another attempt to depose Police Clerk Gardner and has again failed. He brought the matter up at the meeting of the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners, at which a decision was to be rendered as to Gardner's guilt on the forgery charge.

The Mayor had the resolution declaring the place vacant ready and introduced it. City Attorney Piersol explained that the Board had not the power to carry out the resolution if it were passed, as Gardner was not appointed by it but by Chief Lloyd.

City Engineer Wilson and Piersol voted against the resolution and it was lost.

A resolution was then passed requesting all employes to carefully compare and check up all goods before receipting for them.

It was recommended that J. W. Pankhead, foreman of truck 1, be transferred to extraman of engine No. 2, that Mike Quigley, extraman of engine No. 2, be given the foremanship made vacant, and that John Fitzsimmons, steward of chemical No. 1, be dismissed from the fire department.

At the request of the Mayor no action will be taken on the matters for one week.

OIL IS POURED ON.

The Troubled Waters of the Exposition Now at Rest.

ITS SUCCESS IS ASSURED.

An Unqualified Endorsement by the Merchants' Exchange.

OIL DEVELOPING DEBATED.

Private Workers Are Afraid of the Eastern Trusts.

At the meeting of the Merchants' Exchange last night, the following resolution was introduced by George L. Fish:

"Resolved, That the Oakland Exposition has the hearty endorsement of the Merchants' Exchange and that the Secretary be and is hereby instructed to communicate with the Board of Directors of the Exposition to ascertain what work or assistance may be required of the Merchants' Exchange to assist them in making the Exposition a success."

This is practically the same resolution introduced by Mr. Fish at the last meeting of the Directors of the Exchange, and which, after speeches opposing the adoption of the same had been made by Messrs. Sinclair and Arper, was laid over for two weeks.

Last night, Messrs. Sinclair and Arper, while claiming the right to criticise any project which came up before the Exchange, expressed the hope that the forthcoming exposition would be a success.

One of the charges made at the last meeting of the Exchange against the Exposition Association was that it had misappropriated $1700 which had been intended for charity to its own use.

Theodore Gier, who is a member of the Exposition Association, as also of the Exchange, said that he knew the sentiment of the members of the Exposition Association, and that it was not their idea that the proceeds of the last Exposition should be considered private funds, but that they should be kept in trust for future Expositions for the city of Oakland and for the welfare of the city.

President Witcher then called Mr. Arper to the chair and said that he was very sorry that anything had been said in the Exchange that could be construed into a criticism. He had been one of the men who had been appointed as one of the Directors of last year's Exposition, and had resigned for one reason only. He had gone on the Board and understood that the Exposition was to be for the merchants, manufacturers and mechanics, but ascertained that it was only for the manufacturers and producers. The merchants were not expected, on account of lack of space, to take part. When he had found that out, he had tendered his resignation as a Director. But the gentlemen went ahead and made the Exposition a great success. It had been spoken of favorably, not alone by the press of this vicinity, but also in the State. It had brought a great many people to the county and had resulted as a great benefit. He thought the directors of the enterprise were entitled to a great deal of credit for their efforts. It might be true that the association was a private corporation; still, he thought it could do a great deal of good. Next year the association might be able to erect a building of its own. Those gentlemen were entitled to do what they wanted with the funds, but he was in favor of encouraging the enterprise.

John A. Britton said that his name had been mentioned as a critic in the matter by the press, and that he unfortunately had not been able to be present at the last meeting, when the Exposition had been under discussion. Of course, reporters might not be infallible. They had a faculty for looking underneath for the current that was running under the surface, and he thought there may have been underlying a feeling of bad intent on at the last meeting. He knew that such a feeling had existed before the last meeting. There seemed to be a little jarring, a little rubbing together and opposition, not toward the Oakland Exposition, but toward individuals connected with the Oakland Exposition. A year ago, he continued, the Exposition had been a success, and he was sure it would be a success this year. If it should turn out in that manner it would result to the benefit of Oakland.

Mr. Fish's resolution was then adopted without a dissenting voice.

THE OIL MATTER.

E. M. Hoagland, representing Napa oil prospectors, was allowed the floor, and said that he had understood that the Exchange intended to discuss the question of developing the oil deposits in Contra Costa County. He took occasion to say that a purse had been raised in Napa for the purpose of making wells in Contra Costa, and that as soon as they had begun to secure leases from the farmers they had found that other persons had jumped and tried to do the same thing, and had created a prejudice in the minds of the land holders against the Napa people, who held, among other leases, a lease on the Miner ranch, which they were operating.

In response to a number of questions by Mr. Britton, Hoagland said that his object in coming before the Board was to admonish the members to beware of aiding everybody who pretended to be desirous of developing the oil industry, especially if the developers were the Pacific Coast Oil Company or the Standard Oil Company, which was the same thing. He had lost all the money he had put into the business as a result of the peculiar way those corporations had of doing business.

Col. Sontag, ex-Prison Director, who is something of an oil man himself, and to whom Hoagland had indirectly referred during his talk, was allowed the floor. He told of his connection with the oil raisers of Los Angeles; how, within an area of six acres, they had an output of 2500 barrels a day. The oil was a fuel oil and they had an outlet for but 1200 barrels a day. He had gone to San Francisco for the purpose of securing an outlet for the overplus of oil. He referred to the fact that a great deal of their oil found its way into Contra Costa County, among the consumers being the Giant Powder Works, which consumed 2000 barrels a month, and the Selby Smelting Works, which had a minimum order of 2500 barrels per month. There were plenty of factories in San Francisco, the expenses of running which would be reduced if the fuel could only be obtained near at hand. The rolling mills of Los Angeles were sending plates to San Francisco, because, by using oil for fuel, they could turn out the work so much cheaper. He had concluded that oil could be got within fifty miles of San Francisco. He had become acquainted with A. McPherson. He had heard that that gentleman had a number of leases on oil lands. He had seen the lands under lease, and if he had seen croppings of gold or silver on the ground as favorable as he had seen indications of oil, he could promise a fortune to the prospectors. He said he would take the contracts, and he had done so, and since the 5th of June he had been working with a view of developing the wells. His idea was to get more contracts. He had seen some of the farmers. The second time he had seen some of them he had received the cold shoulder, because of what somebody had presumably said about his work. He had seen Hoagland and knew what he was engaged in. But Sontag, speaking for himself, said that he asked no assistance from any one. He had the capital behind him. He had ordered his cable and some heavy timbers, and yesterday two cars of material had been shipped to the scene. He was going to have a rig to sink, if necessary, a well of 2000 feet. If he should strike oil it would be a great thing for Oakland. He had money enough to carry out the work. All he wanted was to find the oil.

"You're not connected with the Standard Oil Company?" asked Mr. Arper.

"Not that I am aware of, and I am not connected with the Pacific Coast Oil Company at all," was the reply.

Col. Sontag said that he expected to find not alone fuel oil in the hills, but also illuminating oil.

Mr. Hoagland said that he hoped Col. Sontag was an innocent party in the enterprise.

Col. Sontag said that he had put up his money in the business, and that nobody controlled him.

Hoagland again took the floor, and said that McPherson had gone to him and said that he had heard that he (Hoagland) had induced some people in Napa to get interested in the oil business, and that if the Napa people would go into the business he (McPherson) would like to go in with them. McPherson said he would turn over all his leases to the Napa folks or the speaker, except a few that he wanted to hold for a speculation. McPherson, continued Hoagland, had been a clerk of the Pacific Coast Oil Company, and had an agreement with that company to let them know whatever he did in the oil business. The speaker said he had asked what leases McPherson had and had been shown them. The leases had been obtained, he said, on the condition that work and the development of the wells was to begin in one year, or that a rent of $1 per acre was to be paid for the land. He had seen that the leases were about to expire, and had told McPherson so, but the latter had said that such was not the case, because he could take a pick and shovel and go all over the land covered by the leases in a short time, and that the farmers could not object, because they did not have a dollar to fight the case in the courts. It had been agreed that it would be best to hold a meeting on Saturday night to meet the farmers at Thompson's blacksmith shop. When the speaker had reached the shop he had found McPherson there and Sontag "standing Thompson up" for a lease of his land. When McPherson had seen Hoagland, he had said that it was all up between him and the speaker and he had turned the leases over to Sontag, who, he claimed, had $15,000 in bank.

Col. Sontag said he thought it bad taste for Hoagland to stand there and tell all that had been said with McPherson. The Colonel said that he did not want to be placed in the light of an antagonist to Hoagland. So far as he was concerned, he wanted to say that Hoagland had his best wishes.

Then Hoagland said he did not believe McPherson was an innocent party, and he would like to have him present to hear it. Hoagland then asserted that while Col. Sontag had said he had induced San Francisco people to buy Los Angeles oil, he had never heard of the affair before, on the contrary he knew that Armstrong, a member of the National Supply Company, had done that work and held the contracts for it now. He thought the people would like to know about the business, so that the Pacific Coast Oil Company might be kept out, and he knew that Mr. McPherson was interested in it.

George L. Fish endorsed Colonel Sontag.

John A. Britton expressed his gratification, after repeated failures to work the Contra Costa wells, that some person had come forward to do the work, and President Witcher said he was glad to have individuals and a corporation undertake the industry, and he was satisfied that it would be for the interest of this city.

The meeting then adjourned.

An Athletic Boom Is Started All Along the Line.

BASEBALL TO THE FRONT.

Considerable Interest Turned to Local Boxing Contests.

TENNIS IS BEING REVIVED.

Notes From the Clubs and a Medley of Gossip.

The bantam weight boxing torunament opens on June 30th at the Oakland Athletic Club on Hollis and B streets, north Oakland.

The Pacific Coast championship tennis matches are scheduled for July 3d and 4th at San Rafael.

The Alameda Boating Club holds a regatta on June 27th.

The annual shoot of Company F, N. G. C. is billed for next Saturday at Shell Mound Park.

General interest in sports looms up and a prosperous summer is predicted.

THE UMPIRE.

Baseball is booming, boxing is at its height, wheeling is the rage, tennis will soon be in full swing and football is in sight. This is the encouraging outlook for a summer of activity in the sporting world of California and there certainly should be no lack of amusements. The various clubs and athletic organizations are shaking off the drowsiness of the past and certainly the prospects are decidedly pleasing.

Now that everything is in readiness, all that is necessary for the public in general to do is to come to the center with a smile and be on hand to enjoy as well as encourage the sports.

The Sharkey boom is waning somewhat for the big bruiser has now become a familiar figure on the streets as well as in the club room. The fact that his training quarters have been established in the Acme Club has served one good purpose at least, for it has been the signal for greatly increased attendance. Sharkey has been admired, talked to and interviewed until he is sick of that kind of business, for the fighter has not much of a social nature in his make-up. Indeed, his chief occupation when he is not in training, is remaining silent and even to his most intimate friends he never unburdens his soul, while an outsider must consider himself fortunate if the big man condescends to answer a question in a longer sentence than "Yes" or "No."

Under the able training of Danny Needham, Sharkey is improving materially, though he is not working as if he had a really big fight on his hands. That he is slow, everybody acknowledges, but it is recognized that when he does hit, something is going to drop. If by any accident, Sharkey should land on Corbett's chin it may be all up with the champion for the sailor's blows are terrible.

Sporting men are inclined to the belief that Sharkey's tactics will be to stand up and take punishment as fast as it is meted out to him by Corbett for four rounds and he certainly will be able to stand a great deal of this treatment. The somewhat lax methods of training are pointed to to corroborate this idea. The big man will not admit anything of the kind and in fact, from all that can be learned, has not yet decided what he will do when he enters the ring.

The possibility of Sharkey knocking Corbet out is so remote that bets as high as 50 to 1 are offered and even at that price very few takers are in evidence. With gambling men, this is a good bet if lost and there always remains the one possibility of winning. The betting is chiefly centered on the number of rounds Sharkey will stand up and the possibility of his landing blows on Corbett. Bets on the latter are frequent and some are willing to put up money that the sailor will not touch Corbett at all, that is not land a good blow. As to the former, Corbett himself has cautioned his friends not to place bets on his knocking Sharkey out. There is every possibility that there will be no knockout at all, for it is an easy matter to a man like Sharkey to take punishment.

If the story in circulation has any truth in it, Corbett does not intend to injure the sailor lad, but instead will strive to give him a little cheap reputation and advertising for business purposes. The statements are made that the match is a put up job and that next theatrical season, Corbett and Sharkey will be seen on the stage in a new play now being written for them and controlled by Brady.

It is claimed that this is the inside of the whole affair and if so, explains why Corbett is willing to risk so much for such small gain. It is said his home coming was principally to pick up some clever pugilist to work with him next season and as Sharkey has never been whipped, he was selected. Then too, he is a fine specimen of manhood and with the reputation of having stood up to the champion of the world for four rounds he would be a drawing card. It is also a well known fact that Corbett is more or less vain and his face would show up in favorable contrast to Sharkey's before the footlights. These may be idle rumors but it is certainly the talk that is going the rounds of sporting circles.

If Corbett intended to follow up his pugilistic career, why did he give his championship belt to Maher who in turn lost it to Fitz minors. This is a point that is worrying many and would seem to bear out the idea that the champion only enters the ring for the sake of advertising Sharkey for the theatrical enterprise.

The expulsion of De Witt Van Court from the Acme Club has created a decided sensation among the sporting fraternity all over the Coast, for he is better known perhaps than any one other club man, being prominently identified with many important athletic efforts, not to say anything of his career in the baseball line.

It is needless to repeat the alleged grounds for the expulsion, for everybody interested is familiar with them, but in justice to Van Court, guilty or not guilty, it is only fair that he should have his say, for there are always two sides to every story and thus far indignities have been heaped upon his head through the public press without allowing him much opportunity to present his case. Van Court still has many friends in the club for which he has done so much and his summary dismissal has caused a shadow to hang about the club rooms.

It must not be argued that the Umpire is taking up Van Court's fight, for such is not the case, for if he is guilty of the charges made, he certainly deserves severe censure, but as the sensational portion of the story, from the Directors' side has been given so much prominence as I before said, it is only fair that Van Court should be heard before the public. His story is as follows:

"The Board of Directors of the club stated that I admitted I tried to entice seventy-five members from the club, which I deny and which they cannot prove. I admit that I applied to the Reliance Club for a position with Professors Leandro and Williamson, and I claim every man has a right to better himself if he can. We were instructed on two occasions by President George F. Neece of the Acme, that we were to be laid off during the months of July and August and coming from the head of the club we had every reason to believe it true.

"We informed the athletes of these facts and they immediately rebelled, and openly stated that they would go to the Reliance Club with us if we could get positions there. They started a petition and secured a number of signatures in a few minutes. The petition was started without any request or suggestion from me. I feel that I am no more to blame for that than any of the other professors.

"As to my being a traitor to the club I would like to ask the members whether I am any more of a traitor for trying to better myself than members who allow themselves to be elected to manage the club, then plunge it into debt and make no attempt to build it up financially or otherwise."

"As to my expulsion I am still as much a member of the Acme Club as any member there, and better entitled to membership than two of the Directors who expelled me, as one was elected to office when he was in arrears for dues, and the same officer with one other director has been more than three months in arrears for dues, and instructed me to keep out members who owed less than he.

"A clause in the constitution and by-laws states that charges against a member must be made in writing not less than five days before trial, the charged member must be given a fair hearing and if proven guilty may be reprimanded or asked to resign, and until he absolutely refuses to resign he cannot be expelled. I was not given five minutes' notice or hearing, and further they have no grounds for even asking me to resign.

"I wish to state that the Board of Directors of the Reliance Club have had nothing whatever to do with this affair as I went to them for a position, they having made no offers whatever."

Van Court has signed with the Reliance Club and will assume his duties in July.

The advent of horse racing on the Oakland Trotting Park is being looked forward to with pleasure by lovers of the sport. The old track is being refitted in fine style under the direction of the California Jockey Club, but more personally supervised by its President, Thomas H. Williams, who has done so much for racing on this coast. The new track will be built on scientific plans and promises to be one of the finest in the United States. The old course is being regraded and back stretch will be lowered though near the grand stand there will be a raise of grade to establish a level the entire distance. Very careful preliminary surveys have been made and nothing will be left undone to facilitate speed.

And now the season for summer outings approaches, tennis agains comes to the front. Some time ago the game cut a prominent figure in social and sporting circles in Oakland, but of late it has been slumbering and no particular interest has been shown. The carefully prepared courts have been allowed to be ruined and many are now overgrown with weeds. The bitumen courts have been neglected and the excellently equipped home of the Oakland Tennis Club, in East Oakland, has been turned into a bicycle academy. This was indeed a sad state of affairs for the future of the game, but let us hope that this coming revival will not be of mushroom type, but instead stimulate the sport so that in the future summer, spring and fall months, there will be no lack of amusement in this line.

The near approach of the Pacific Coast championship games has created the new boom. These take place as usual in San Rafael and if the past is to be any criterion, certainly will be interesting, though the absence of Sumner Hardy, the present champion will detract from the interest in the meet.

The events will be strictly gentlemen's singles, though some exhibition doubles and ladies' matches will be witnessed. The finals will not however determine the championship for the winner must meet young Hardy before he can claim the honors. As Hardy is in Alaska at present, the prospects for a match with him are far distant.

San Rafael is the center of society during the championship meets. Tennis is recognized as a society sport being championed and patronized by the upper ten, almost exclusively. As well it is a game that the ladies are interested in, for they are allowed to wield the racquet as well as the men. Some argue that this is detrimental to the sport and point to the fact that the fair sex is excluded rigidly from nearly all other games. But why is this—chiefly because football, baseball and the like are not suited to woman, being altogether too rough. The belief that the ladies are a set back to the game and have helped to smother it in the past is purely a fallacy.

SATURDAY PRESS WINS.

The Emeralds Are Defeated After a Hard Struggle.

Sunday afternoon the Saturday Press baseball nine of West Oakland and the Emeralds of North Oakland crossed bats on the new grounds at Nineteenth and Peralta streets before an assemblage of fully 1500 people. This was the first game played on the grounds and although the score was all one-sided in favor of the West End boys yet the contest was a very interesting one and many brilliant plays were made by both sides. The only disappointment of the day was the failure of the balloon ascension which was announced to take place.

The cause was the fact that Professor George, who was to make the ascent, fell from a bicycle Saturday evening, sustaining injuries which prevented him from carrying out his part of the programme.

The Saturday Press Club started the game with a rush and scored three runs in the first inning. They did not score again until the fourth when one man reached home. In the fifth and sixth innings they did their heaviest work, making nine runs in those innings. The Emeralds could not measure Shea's curving balls and were unable to score until the fifth inning when three men crossed the home plate. They made another in the sixth and two in the seventh which were the only runs they could secure.

Some of the principal features of the contest was the strong battery work of Shea and Peters, the superb manner in which both Rollins and Wilderbrandt covered first base, and the home run drive made by Jack Keating.

Throughout the entire game much enthusiasm prevailed and every good play made by the tossers evoked loud applause from their adherents.

The score in detail is as follows:

A TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

The Annual Championships to Take Place in July.

The time rapidly approaches for the ninth annual lawn tennis championship of the Pacific Coast, which will be held, as heretofore, at the Hotel Rafael, San Rafael, on the 3d and 4th of July.

It is expected that many new players of considerable ability will enter this year to try and wrest the trophy from the former champions.

Sumner Hardy is the present champion, being the first winner of the silver cup that must be won three times to become the personal property of any player. Mr. Hardy is at present in Alaska, and will not be here to defend his title, so the result of the tournament is difficult to foretell.

Sam Hardy, his brother, is perhaps the most likely candidate, though Robert Whitney and his brother George are clever players and may spring some pleasant surprises. They are members of the California Lawn Tennis Club, in San Francisco, and local enthusiasts hope Oakland's favorite may win, thus keeping the trophy on this side of the bay, where it has been since 1893. Walter Magee will enter from Oakland.

The entrance fee is one dollar, and the list closes on July 1st at 5 P. M.

The winner of the all-comers' tournament will be presented with a handsome prize (value $100) and the runner-up second prize (value $50) by the Pacific States Lawn Tennis Association.

A silver cup is offered by the association for the match between the winner of the all-comers' tournament and the present champion, to become the personal property of the winner when won three times, not necessarily in succession.

All matches will be the best two out of three, except the finals and championship matches, which will be three out of five.

The Tournament Committee is composed of Sam Hardy, Chairman, H. Parker, Walter Magee; referee, Geo. F. Whitney.

The following is the Executive Committee: R. N. Whitney, President; Sumner Hardy, Vice President; A. Starr Keeler, Secretary-Treasurer, George F. Whitney, Samuel Hardy, D. E. Allison Jr. and Walter Magee.

THE OAKLAND NAVY.

The Surprise Beats the Amalia in a Close Contest.

The regular monthly Oakland Navy races took place on the estuary last Sunday and drew a large crowd of interested yachtsmen to the scene. No mishap of any consequence marred the sport, and the event was one of the most interesting yet held. When the starting gun boomed forth shortly after 2 o'clock, the following boats crossed the line: Mirth, white class cruiser; Annie, red class cruiser; Aeolus, sloop, red class cruiser; Nettie, red class cruiser; Aclous, canoe, red class cruiser; Surprise, white class racer; Lucile, red class cruiser; Hurricane, red class cruiser; Amalia, red class racer; Nautilus, red class racer, Ralph B., white class cruiser.

The race soon developed the fact that either the Amalia or the Surprise would come in first. The Surprise was sailed by Arthur Smith, while Captain Dermody handled the Amalia. On the first round the Amalia had a fair lead, though the Surprise was making good time. When, however, the Amalia's jib broke away, the Surprise had the advantage, and won by one minute and eight seconds.

The Nettie, Hurricane and Lucile withdrew from the race before the finish. The Mirth, Surprise, Amalia and Nautilus were the winners in their classes.

The corrected time of the boats which finished is as follows: Mirth, 1:31:15; Annie, 1:32:02; Aeolus, sloop, 1:46:21; Aeolus, canoe, 1:35:22; Surprise, 1:24:07; Amalia, 1:25:15; Nautilus, 1:31:31; Ralph B., 1:43:14.

Points were awarded as follows: Mirth, class 25, general, 10; Annie, class 20, general 20; Surprise, class 25, general 50; Amalia, class 25, general 40; Nautilus, class 25, general 30; Ralph B., class 20.

CROSS COUNTRY RUN.

The Reliance and Olympic Wheelmen Enjoy Themselves.

Recently the Reliance wheelmen entertained the Olympic Club cyclers with a joint run to Lake Chabot. This time it was the Olympics' turn to do the "proper thing" and they did it royally. The two clubs marshalled under their respective captains from Tenth and Howard streets, San Francisco, at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, and a run to Woodside was made by one o'clock. On the way President Eaton of the Olympic Club entertained the wheelmen at San Mateo.

The run was most enjoyable and entirely free from any accidents whatever.

Next Sunday the Reliance Wheeling Annex will hold its first race over the San Leandro triangle for the purpose of selecting a team to compete for the Baker & Hamilton trophy, to be awarded to the winners of the twenty mile road race which takes place July 1st.

The trophy is a beautiful silver cup, gold lined, standing thirty-two inches high. It was made at a cost of $500. A drawing of the cup is on exhibition at the Reliance rooms.

THE MILITIA SHOOT.

BANTAM CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The Boxing and Wrestling Matches Will Occur June 30th.

The bantam weight boxing tournament for the championship of the Pacific Coast will open at the Oakland Athletic Club gymnasium on Tuesday evening, June 30th. Sanctions have been received from the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, and already extensive preparations have been made for the affair.

Many amateur boxers are now in training for the event, and when the gong sounds on the opening night an excellent programme will be announced.

As well, there will be some clever wrestling matches, one of special interest between Harry Golder, the champion feather weight of the coast, and R. Wixon, of the light weight class.

J. M. Whelan announces his willingness to meet any amateur boxer of from 133 to 135 pounds weight on the Pacific Coast, either in a limited or finish fight. He is a pupil of Jimmy Carroll, and is said to be very clever with the gloves.

"UNKNOWN" SHOOTERS.

A New Club Which Will Perforate the Target.

At the prize shoot of the "Unknown" Club, at Bird's Point, Alameda, Sunday, the first prize of $1 was won by H. Betten, second prize, 75 cents, by "Sport"; third prize, 50 cents, by Al Bohm, and fourth prize, 25 cents, by M. Ulrichs.

The charter of the club is still open, and the next meeting will take place in San Francisco at 900 Olive avenue. The Pacific grounds will be the scene of the coming shoot.

Sunday's prizes were donated by Captain Lewis.

CYCLING IN FRANCE.

Comment on the Defeat of the American Rider.

The defeat of John S. Johnson abroad by three foreign riders has been the subject of considerable comment. That this rider, who has proved himself a prize winner and champion on this side of the water, should be so unmercifully trounced by men who would not stand a ghost of a show again at least four American riders, is naturally a matter that has proved irritable to the sensitive natures of Americans, who look upon successful conquests in Europe as a matter of course.

But it must be understood that racing in France is much different from the methods employed by promoters in this country. Across the briny a champion cyclist is the envied of the envied. He is feted and treated like a lord while his star is in the ascendency, but let him fall and the sympathies of the nation fly to the man who is his conqueror. Naturally an intrepid race, the Frenchmen make the most of their nerve, particularly in cycle racing, where there are so many competitors and where it is a hard matter to remain on top very long. The tracks are small and well banked. To see the riders skurrying around the turns or into the stretch is worth going miles to witness. They do not know what fear is, and American racing men must become accustomed to such competition. The method of pace-making in vogue in France has gotten down to a system, and French racing men know how to follow pace. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that Johnson has made no better showing.

It is a great honor in France to win the Brassard medal, or plate, as it is called. This decoration is attached to the arm and is worn by the rider so long as he is able to retain it. Of course the event is not run every day, but when it is called the French riders fight tooth and nail for the trophy. Each track has such a plate, and it is highly prized indeed.

ACME ROAD RACE.

Good Time Made Despite the Poorness of the Roads.

George Westphal, with a three minute handicap, won the Acme Club ten mile race Sunday in 27 minutes and 40 seconds.

The start was made from Fruitvale at 11 o'clock, and considering the bad condition of the roads the time was excellent.

T. A. Schleuter, with two minutes' allowance, made the best time, 27 minutes and 32 seconds. Pete Lefevre, scratch, would probably have made the results different were it not for the fact that he punctured his rear tire near the finish. As it was, he came in next to last.

The following table shows the entire results:

| Position. | Contestants | Handicap. | Net Riding Time. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | G. Westphal | 3:00 | 27:40 |
| 2 | G. A. Wyman | 2:45 | 28:32 |
| 3 | T. A. Schleuter | 2:00 | 27:33 |
| 4 | J. H. Oley | 2:30 | 28:14 |
| 5 | C. H. Staples | 1:15 | 28:29 |
| 6 | J. J. Gallagher | 4:00 | 30:20 |
| 7 | E. J. Smith | 1:30 | 28:00 |
| 8 | A. H. Agnew | 1:45 | 29:16 |
| 9 | A. S. McDougall | 1:06 | 28:34 |
| 10 | F. Cortage | 1:10 | 29:31 |
| 11 | G. H. Crafts | scratch | 28:10 |
| 12 | P. M. Lefevre | scratch | 28:25 |
| 13 | M. F. Rose | scratch | 28:30 |

The prizes were: First place, $20 in merchandise; best time, $10 in merchandise; second place, pair of Morgan & Wright racing tires; third, $7.50 bath robe; fourth, $5 in merchandise; fifth, racing suit, and sixth, a year's subscription to the Western Wheelman.

MARK HANNA, WHO HAS SO ABLY MANAGED McKINLEY'S CAMPAIGN.

THE DAY'S DOINGS.

Rain Dampens the Ardor of the Army of Visitors.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—A chilling rain began at 8 o'clock this morning, and the second day of the great Republican Convention promises to be very disagreeable.

Flags and bunting are hanging limp, and the spirits of the delegates are correspondingly depressed.

There is little interest felt by the great mass of delegates now that McKinley's nomination is certain and the platform settled, except perhaps as to a few technical points of phraseology, in which comparatively few are much interested.

There has been no inspiring oratory, and the street parades have palled upon the taste.

The contest over the Vice Presidency will probably put life into the convention as soon as the nomination for President has been made.

The fight lies between Garrett A. Hobart of New Jersey and Morton of New York. The drift seems to be towards Morton, in spite of the protests of the anti-Platt faction of New York, headed by Miller, and of Mark Hanna.

However, the situation may change very rapidly in either direction after the convention effects permanent organization and settles down to business.

The weather, if it continues disagreeable, will likely shorten the convention, as the delegates are already getting tired and anxious to get away.

Two days ago it seemed certain the convention would not adjourn before Friday night.

Now, in spite of the practical impossibility of getting through with so much business, there is talk of adjournment tonight.

It is probable the end will be reached tomorrow.

This may interfere with the plans for a huge demonstration in honor of McKinley, that has been projected.

The brass bands last night and the heat indoors kept most of the delegates in the streets until a late hour, and they were late in getting out this morning.

THE MORTON BOOM.

Hanna's Position Is Rather Exasperating to Platt's Forces.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The complex situation last night in which the feud between the New York factions was the principal factor, coupled with the desire to put the Hanna and McKinley managers on record, continued this morning without material change.

Platt was up early this morning and saw the leaders of the Indiana and Illinois delegations before 9 o'clock. He was pursuing his usual tactics, stating his position to all leaders of the delegation whether favorable or unfavorable to his cause. He would only say cautiously: "In the event of Morton's defeat on the Presidential issue it is thought Morton would accept second place and then he would ask for support."

Every care was taken at the New York Headquarters not to in any way antagonize Hanna or mention him as an enemy of the Morton boom for Vice President.

Chairman Hackett, of the New York Committee, said: "Hanna cannot be expected to enter into this fight when he has the McKinley fight upon his shoulders. Surely he has honors enough in securing first place for his candidate."

At the Ohio headquarters up to 9:30 o'clock, no definite answer had been given Miller or Cornelius Bliss as to their proposition to secure aid in their fight against Morton and they were getting uneasy.

Milholland however, said there was no doubt there would be assistance lent by friends of McKinley in the West to those in the East who assisted them.

The Morton people this morning figure the following vote for Morton for Vice President:

New York, 56.
Delaware, 6.
Maryland, 16.
Michigan, 26.
Nebraska, 16.
Connecticut, 12.
Florida, 6.
Massachusetts, 30.
Minnesota, 16.
New Hampshire, 8.
North Dakota, 16.
Pennsylvania, 64.
South Dakota, 8.
Texas, 30.
Wisconsin, 24.
Vermont, 8.
Mississippi, 18.
Ohio, 24.
Rhode Island, 8.
Tennessee, 24.
Indiana, 16.
Missouri, 11.
Utah, 6.
Total, 445.

For a choice it would be necessary to have 460 votes.

When Warner Miller was asked to speak upon Hanna's queer attitude, he said: "Hanna will show his hand after the nomination of McKinley has been accomplished. Wait until then. We had several delegates telegraph Gov. Morton as to his Vice Presidential aspirations but he has not been heard from yet."

As the morning wore on it was evident that all the influence the Miller crowd could bring to bear was used with Chauncey M. Depew to get him to withdraw from nominating Morton for President.

It was urged that it was perfectly evident that Morton was in the race for Vice President and therefore he should withdraw from the Presidency.

Depew's answer was: "Morton assures me he is in the race. I must nominate him according to agreement."

SWITCHING THE SEATS.

A Rearrangement for the Better Handling of the Delegates.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

CONVENTION HALL, ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Many changes have been made in the seats of the delegates in Convention Hall.

The officers of the convention have arranged the seats in alphabetical order, according to States.

Some delegates maintain their places, especially those near the top of the list, but beginning with Maryland the changes are numerous.

Maine remains as before exactly in front of the Speaker's stand.

The New York delegation is crowded far back in the middle section.

Oregon is behind New York.

In the third section, North Carolina occupies the first row and all but four seats of the second, which will probably be occupied by the big four, Foraker, Bushnell, Hanna and Grosvenor.

Some of the changes will probably cause considerable feeling.

The Virginia delegation, which was near the front of the first section, has been relegated to the rear of the third section.

The States most benefited by the changes are Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Nevada and New Jersey.

Every seat has been tagged with the name of the State whose delegate is to occupy it, and it is believed there will be no confusion in seating the delegates.

The Assistant Sergeants-at-Arms entitled to the floor are decorated with white badges.

The rearrangement of employes has been made in the hope that there will be more efficient service on the floor of the convention had, and better order preserved in the hall.

AWAITING THE SIGNAL.

Patriotic Airs Received With Enthusiasm by the Galleries.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The Committee on Resolutions which remained in session until 4 o'clock this morning and the Committee on Credentials were at work again at 10 o'clock this morning the hour set for the Convention to meet.

The preamble and several planks of the platform agreed upon by sub-committee and telegraphed to the country last night exclusively by the Associated Press will be adopted by the full committee but the indications were that the report could not be submitted to the Convention until the afternoon.

The work going on behind the scenes in no way affected the attendance at the Convention Hall.

The clouds lowering over the city threatened but the crowds, bands and clubs streamed to the hall and spread themselves over the wilderness of seats.

The delegates' seats in the pit had been carefully ticketed since yesterday and a staff marked the location of the delegations.

This prevented much of the confusion and disorder manifested on the floor yesterday.

The delegates and alternates moved to their places quickly without demonstration.

The band in the gallery played the Fisiade quickstep and gallops and popular airs as the convention assembled.

Senator Lodge, member of the Resolutions Committee, elbowed his way up the aisle for a final conference with his New England friends but no other members of that committee were in the Hall.

The leaders as a rule were late in arriving.

The music was inspiring and the scene was one of life and animation. The busy pencillers of the press were hard at work.

Dark faces in the delegations marked their geographical location on the map of the country without recourse to the delegation staffs. Some of the colored delegates are magnificent specimens of manhood and attract much attention.

Here and there, through the northern delegations was a swarthy face. Among the notable colored men in the Convention were ex-Congressman Small's famous negro pilot of South Carolina, whose services to the Union navy in the days of war, were recently recognized by Congress, James Hill of Mississippi, and John M. Langston of Virginia.

The two distinguished sons of General Grant, Col. Fred Grant, of New York, who was Minister to Austria, and U. S. Grant of San Diego, Cal., sat side by side in the space reserved for guests.

At 10.25 the band struck up a medley of patriotic airs which was received with cheers and plaudits by the packed galleries.

The belated leaders moved down into their places.

Platt and General Bushnell of Ohio came in together. The Tioga statesman jostled ex-Senator Warner Miller as he passed but no sign of recognition passed between them. The feud between New York leaders is bitter.

Mark Hanna, who was among the last political generals to appear, was stopped every step by delegates and greeted in the warmest fashion. There was, however, no open demonstration. He stopped up on the platform and held a whispered consultation with Senator Carter.

As they stood conversing Chairman Fairbanks moved to the front of the platform and dropped the gavel on the second session of the Convention.

FAVORING MORTON.

The New Yorker's Chances for the Vice Presidency Increase.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The announcement was made just as the Convention was called to order that Foraker would nominate Morton for the Vice Presidency as soon as the ballot for President was finished, practically settled the gossip of the morning.

The plan is that when a motion to nominate McKinley by acclamation is made, to also include Levi P. Morton for Vice President.

It looks as if the plan will carry, although there may be opposition.

AN EXCITING START.

Dissenters Raise a Rumpus but Are Soon Brought to Time.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Temporary Chairman Fairbanks was obliged to hammer vigorously when twenty minutes before eleven he attempted to quell the tumult into working order.

On the platform at his left stood Mark Hanna, the focus of every eye beside him. With friendly hand on his shoulder and pouring confidence into Hanna's ear was Carter of Montana, the retiring Chairman of the National Committee. For five minutes Fairbanks rested on his oars while the ushers perspired in futile attempts to persuade or compel compliance to the Chairman's request.

Then in a voice which barely projected itself to the center of the pit, Fairbanks said:

"The Convention will be in order."

The Convention was in comparative good order upon the introduction of Dr. Wilbur Williams, pastor of the Union M. E. Church of St. Louis, who made the prayer.

Dr. Williams moved to the edge of the platform with outstretched arms. The audience arose and all stood while the invocation was being delivered.

Dr. Williams is a striking looking man. His strong, smooth face is deeply furrowed; he wore gold bowed glasses. The people watched him intently but his words were not heard twenty feet away.

As he lifted his head at the conclusion of the prayer the crowd sank back into the seats and the convention was again under way.

"The Senator from Massachusetts," announced the Chairman at the conclusion of the prayer, whereupon there was an outburst of applause as the delegates perceived a trim and fashionably clad person, Henry Cabot Lodge, the embodiment of a polished Puritan, in the aisle before the platform.

Lodge asked for the Committee on Resolutions the privilege of sitting during the progress of the convention. He said the sub-committee had completed the platform and it was being considered by the full committee. He asked leave to report this afternoon.

The chairman's call for the report of the Committee on Credentials met no responses and that committee was passed.

Senator Sewell of New Jersey and Senator Wellington of Maryland, asked unanimous consent to make the reports of the Committees on Permanent Organization and on Rules, but objections were heard.

A motion by Wellington of Maryland that the Convention take a recess until 2 o'clock was buried under an overwhelming chorus of "Noes" and the delegates applauded their decision.

The Chairman called loudly to know what was the further pleasure of the Convention.

Several resolutions were handed up and referred to the Committee on Rules, without debate.

The Convention seemed to be at a standstill.

Sewell of New Jersey again jumped to his feet and this time moved that the report of the Committee on permanent organization be received out of order. His motion was greeted with cheers by the galleries who were impatient to have the Convention proceed, but from the floor came angry cries of "No." "No."

The motion was put and Chairman Fairbanks declared it carried.

Wellington indignantly protested that the question was out of order as the Convention could not suspend rules. His point was warmly seconded by Delegate Littlefield of Maine.

The chair ruled that both the gentlemen were out of order as the Convention had decided to receive the report.

When the reading clerk in reading the committee report, announced "John M. Thurston of Nebraska," he permanent chairman there was an eruption of flags and cheers from the delegates.

A demonstration also greeted the name of "U. S. Grant of California."

The heat was becoming intense, a heat of the damp, wilting, sunless sort, which crimpled collars and kept the whole area a fluttering of gaudy fans.

The reading of the report on permanent organization was followed by a wild tumultuous scene.

Mudd of Maryland, jumped to his feet and loudly protested against action upon the report.

"It can be received," he shouted, "but it cannot be acted upon. Nothing can be done until the Convention has acted on the report of the Committee on Credentials. Until that committe has reported there is no contention."

Chairman Fairbanks overruled the point of order and left Mudd angrily shouting on the floor.

As Fairbanks called for a vote on the adoption of the report, Mudd demanded a call of the roll.

His demand was seconded by delegate Evans of Minnesota.

Fairbanks, however, called for a rising vote and the convention seemed to rise en masse to his call.

The galleries cheered and pandemonium reigned a minute as the Convention realized the overwhelming defeat of the few dissenters against the immediate adoption of the report.

Sewell of New Jersey and Congressman Sereno Payne of New York were designated to escort the permanent Chairman to the platform. They marched down the main aisle while the delegates jumped to their feet, fluttering flags and handkerchiefs and cheering shrilly with a yell that reminded the southerners of the Confederacy.

Fairbanks, with a plume of the National tri-color plumed to the breast of his black frock coat, stepped to the front meeting the trio and grasped the Nebraskan by the hand.

Thurston faced the arena with his hands behind him and began to speak.

THURSTON TALKS.

A Ringing Speech That Brought a Tumult of Applause.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Thurston spoke as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Convention: This happy memory of your kindness and confidence will abide in my grateful memory forever. My sole ambition is to meet your expectations, and I pledge myself to exercise the important powers of this high office with absolute impartiality.

"I beseech your cordial co-operation and support, to the end that our proceedings may be orderly and dignified, as befits a celebration of the Supreme Council of the Republican party.

"Eight years ago I had the distinguished honor to preside over the convention which nominated the last Republican President of the United States.

"Today I have the further distinguished honor to preside over the convention which is to nominate the next President of the United States.

"This generation has its object lesson, and the doom of Democracy is already pronounced. The American people will return the Republican party to power because they know its administration will mean supremacy of the Constitution of the United States, maintenance of law, protection of every American citizen in his right to live, labor and vote, a vigorous foreign policy, the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, the restoration of our merchant marine, safety under the Stars and Stripes on every sea and in every port, a revenue adequate for all the Government expenditures and the gradual extinguishment of the national debt, currency as sound as the Government and as untarnished as its honor, whose dollars, whether of gold, silver or paper, shall have an equal purchasing and debt paying power, will be the best dollars of the civilized world; a protective tariff, which protects, coupled with reciprocity, and which reciprocates by securing the best market for our products and opening the American factories to the free coinage of American muscle; a pension policy just and generous to our living heroes and to the widows and orphans of their dead comrades; a Governmental supervision and control of the transportation lines and rates; the protection of the people from all unlawful combination and the unjust action of aggregated capital and corporated power; an American welcome to every God fearing, liberty loving, Constitution respecting, law abiding, labor seeking, decent man; the exclusion of all whose birth, whose blood, whose condition, whose teaching, whose practices would menace the permanency of the free institutions, endanger the safety of the American people or lessen the opportunities of American labor; the abolition of sectionalism; every star in the American flag shining for the honor and welfare and happiness of every commonwealth and of all the people; a deathless loyalty to all that is truly American, and a patriotism as eternal as the stars."

The punctuation of almost every sentence of his address was a period of yells, rounded off with a fringe of manual applause and stamping.

Thurston is a tall, slender, dark faced, black moustached, spectacled, scholarly looking man. His voice, keyed for the stump, sent every word ringing to the farthest corner of the galleries. No point of his speech was lost upon the assembly, but that which provoked the most enthusiastic uproar was the statement that he presided over the convention which nominated the last Republican President, and was now addressing that to name the next Republican President.

The delegates arose and waved their hands, flags and handkerchiefs with a prolonged cheer when Thurston finished.

As the demonstration ceased, by direction of Permanent Chairman Thurston, a letter was read from J. Henry Fort, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, announcing the committee would be unable to report until afternoon.

Thereupon Governor Bushnell of Ohio moved the Convention take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was carried with a roar, and at 11:23 Chairman Thurston declared the Convention in recess.

The band played "Yankee Doodle" as the crowd found its way out of the hall.

SENATOR THURSTON OF NEBRASKA, PERMANENT CHAIRMAN OF THE CONVENTION.

BUILDING THE PLATFORM.

A Tragic Scene When the Money Question Was Discussed.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The Committee on Resolutions took up the platform promptly on being called together at 10:30.

After reading it as a whole, Chairman Foraker stated the sub-committee had given the different declarations fullest consideration during the night, and had the council of the best thought of the party, not only in deciding on the principles of the party but also in the forms for expressing the same.

It was decided to take the sections up seriatim, for consideration.

The whereas in which the history and mission of the party were covered was adopted without opposition. It is as follows:

"The Republicans of the United States, assembled by their representatives in National Convention, appealing for the popular and historical justification of their claims to the bitter fruits of four years of Democratic control, as well as the matchless achievements of thirty years of Republican rule, earnestly and confidently address themselves to the awakened intelligence, experience and conscience of their countrymen in the following declaration of facts and principles:

"For the first time since the Civil War the American people have now witnessed the calamitous consequences of full and unrestricted Democratic control of the government. It has been a record of unparalleled incapacity, dishonor and disaster. In the administrative management it has ruthlessly sacrificed indispensible revenue, eked out ordinary current running expenses with borrowed money, piled up the public debt to $262,000,000 in time of peace, forced an adverse balance of trade, kept a perpetual menace hanging over the redemption fund, pawned American credit to alien syndicates and reversed all the measures and results of successful Republican rule. In the broad effect of its policy it has precipitated panic, blighted industry and trade with prolonged depression, closed factories, reduced work and wages, halted enterprise and crippled American production, while stimulating foreign production for the American market. Every consideration of public safety and individual interest demands that the government shall be rescued from the hand of those who have shown themselves incapable of conducting it without disaster at home and dishonor abroad, and shall be restored to the party which for thirty years administered it with unequaled success and prosperity.

There was some difference of opinion as to the severity of the language of the indictment of Cleveland's administration.

Chairman Foraker defended it very earnestly and it was adopted without any changes.

THE TARIFF.

The tariff plank was adopted as follows:

"We renew and emphasize our adhesion to the policy of protection as the bulwark of American independence and the foundation of American development and prosperity. This true American policy taxes foreign products and encourages home industry; it puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods; it secures the American market for the American producer; it upholds the American standard of wages for the American working man; it puts the factory by the side of the farm and makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price; it diffuses general thrift and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its responsible application it is just, fair and impartial, equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism.

"We denounce the political Democratic tariff as sectional, partisan and onesided and disastrous to the Treasury, and destructive of business enterprise and we demand such an equitable tariff on foreign imports which come into competition with American products as will not only furnish adequate revenue for the necessary expenses of the government, but will protect American labor from degradation and the wage level of other lands. We are not pledged to any particular schedule. The question of rates is a practical question to be governed by the condition of time and production. The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industry. The country wants a right settlement and then it wants rest.

The Republican party renews its pledge for the protection of all American industries against foreign competition, and declares its faith that the supremacy of the United States among the nations is the result of such a policy. We believe in liberal reciprocity and just retaliation, and demand the application of the golden rule of commerce to all future legislation affecting the tariff and the foreign trade. We believe the repeal of the reciprocity arrangements negotiated by the last Republican Administration was a national calamity, and demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations and remove the restrictions that now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of Europe and secure new markets for the products of our farms, forests and factories.

"We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade. American shipping, the product of American labor employed in American shipyards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes and manned, officered

SUGAR BOUNTIES.

There was no opposition to even the language in any of the sections until the sugar bounty section was reached.

There was some objection to the form of this resolution, and brief speeches were made in support of various propositions, one of these was to amend the resolution by declaring for a specific duty on sugar, and another for a specific declaration for tariff protection. None of these were accepted, and the resolution as sent out last night by the Associated Press was adopted. It is as follows:

"We condemn the present Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of the country. The Republican party favors such measures of encouragement and protection as will speedily lead to the production on American soil of all sugar which Americans use and for which they pay to other countries more than $100,000,000 annually."

Patterson of Illinois and Lauterbach of New York contended for a declaration for a specific duty.

Senator Gear of Iowa contended for the merit of the bounty system, saying the main object was to protect the original producers of sugar in this country, and the bounty system was well calculated to accomplish this purpose.

The committee also adopted resolutions declaring specifically for adequate protection of wool and woolens.

THE FINANCIAL FIGHT.

At 12 o'clock the financial question was taken up.

Teller opened the discussion by offering the various substitutes which he presented in sub-committee. There were three of them, as follows:

Number 1. "The Republican party favors the use of both gold and silver as equal standard money, and pledges its power to secure the free, unrestricted and independent coinage of gold and silver at our mints at the ratio of sixteen parts of silver to one of gold."

Number 2. "Whereas, The basis of the great doctrine of protection is to give constancy of employment and high wages to the toilers, and upon this basis the great men of the party have stood and the party's victories have been achieved; and whereas, the effect of the single gold standard in this country is to make employment insecure and to decrease the wages of the toilers by decreasing the prices of human production; and whereas, since the single gold standard and protection are irreconcilable, it follows that a party cannot reasonably declare for both and attempt to achieve the purposes of both; and if the Republican party shall devote itself to the single gold standard it will be led to the financial policy which commends Americans to buy where they can buy the cheapest; and whereas, if the Republican party is to continue as the advocate and exponent of protection to the American people it must logically oppose the single gold standard policy; now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Republican party, in National Convention assembled, holding to the great truth that its highest mission is to advance the interests of the toilers of the United States, hereby reaffirms the doctrines and protection to American industries and resolved to use all its power to achieve bimetallism, being the free, unrestricted and independent coinage of silver at our mints as they were coined previous to 1873."

Number 3. "The Republican party pledges itself to the free coinage of all silver which may be produced in this country and offered at the mints at the ratio of sixteen parts of silver to one of gold."

Teller made a vigorous speech in support of his resolutions, becoming quite animated when he warmed up. He had scarcely begun when the members of the press, who lined the hall outside the room in which the committee was meeting, were invited to a more distant section of the hotel.

The excuse was made that the committee wanted the use of the hallway for air, but the fact that the Colorado Senator's voice penetrated the walls and was plainly heard on the outside was accepted as the real reason for the eviction of the press.

As the Senator proceeded, he was warmly applauded by his followers.

He spoke vehemently in opposition to the gold standard plank, declaring his belief that in taking this course the party was departing from its vaunted position of defender of the rights of the people and putting itself in the hands of the bond clippers of Lombard and Wall streets. This policy he denounced as unAmerican, unpatriotic and opposed to all the best interests of humanity. He expressed sincere regret that such a course should be adopted, not because it affected him personally, but because it was a step that would seriously affect the welfare of the people of the entire country.

As for himself, he had been a Republican since the ante-bellum days. He had assisted in securing the nomination of Lincoln and had supported him in the campaign. Naturally, therefor, the step now proposed was regarded by him in the most serious light, and he sincerely hoped the step would not be taken.

Teller said if the gold standard plank as proposed was adopted, he would consider it incumbent upon him to sever his connection with the Convention. Believing as he did upon this subject, which was of all questions nearest his heart, he could not consistently continue connections with the body which was so determined to antagonize his conceptions of right and duty and, as he believed, stultify its own record.

Senators Dubois, Idaho, and Cannon, Utah, Myers Mott, N. C., and Cleveland followed in similar strain, also announcing determination to bolt the Convention in case the objectionable gold standard plank was adopted.

Darlington, Penn., replied briefly to Teller, challenging the Senator's allusion to the dictation of Lombard street and saying this was a poor return for the money amounting to many millions of dollars which had been invested in the West by men of the East and building railroads and other enterprises.

"We have given you our money freely," he said, "and are surprised you should now want to pay us in money worth only 50 cents on the dollar."

"Colorado," responded Mr. Teller, "has always paid her debts and will continue to pay them. What we object to is paying $2 for one dollar received."

He then proceeded to briefly show silver had not depreciated but it was gold that had increased in value.

Lodge spoke briefly but largely in a way personal to Teller. He spoke of the esteem in which the Colorado Senator was held and the respect felt for him, but said notwithstanding this feeling, it was impossible to follow his idea of the financial policy. To do so would be ruinous to the great commercial interests of the country. That the Colorado Senator was honest in his convictions and serious in their support no man could doubt, but that he was right did not follow. He regretted they had come to a parting of ways, but the party was not the seeking of the gold standard men, and if it could not be prevented it would have to be endured.

Cannon, Utah, said there was no use for the Republican party taking an effort in his State this year under the millstone of a single gold standard platform. He was severe in his charges against the money power and its domination over this convention. He described the depressed condition of the country, especially his State, and gave notice that he and others would stand by Teller, who truly represented them.

Lemmon (Cal.) advocated the Teller amendment strongly. He insisted that with the majority report as the declaration of the party, their plurality of 40,000 in his State would not only be wiped out but the masses would become alienated from the party indefinitely.

While Mott and Lemmon were as vigorous as could be in protesting against "the pressure" of the gold standard, they did not state in their speeches that they would go out of the convention with Teller. They did state, however, to members of the committee afterward that they would all stand by Teller and if defeated in the convention would declare themselves out of the party and do the best they could for their people hereafter.

Members of the committee who came out of the rooms said they never witnessed such touching scenes in politics. Some of the silver men shed tears while speaking.

Senator Cannon wept, crying aloud as he pleaded for Utah. No funeral could be so sad to him. They loved the party that was about to smite them and cast them out.

Cannon's speech was pronounced the most impressive and affecting. He pictured in very fine language the hope raised in the breasts of the people of Utah and the inter-mountain West by the promises of the Republican party; told how the State had been redeemed from Democratic ranks and an overwhelming majority overcome, and all for what—merely to have all the promises made in behalf of the Republicans ruthlessly trodden in the mire and ignored at the time of their greatest need for a sustaining hand. This course was to them subject of amazement and deepest sorrow. He had hoped up to the latest moment that this catastrophe could be averted, but if it could not be, he, too, deeply as the course pained him, must discontinue to act with the party. His conscience and the interest and convictions of his people demanded this course.

Dubois was most vehement in his utterances as to the result. He showed no emotion but was firmly defiant. He dwelt especially upon the service the West had been to the Republican party, showing that that section never in the hour of the party's need had been untrue to the party call. He dwelt especially upon the strength of the West in the Senate and showed that through the votes of that section in the Senate the Republican party owed the maintenance of its protective policy and all the other party policies. Often when their own section's interests were in no wise involved he asserted the inter-mountain States had been regular in supplying the two Senators for the support of these lines of policy while New York, with not one Republican Senator, and Illinois with only one, and the Southern States, to say nothing of Indiana, Wisconsin and other Northern States, which had not been for years represented in the Senate are inaugurating a contest which is not only ruinous to the West, but as he believed to the end of the country—not only ruinous but unpatriotic and contrary to the principles of the party. In view of these facts, he, too, felt constrained to announce his intention of leaving the convention in case of the adoption of the gold plank.

Mott, of North Carolina, followed in much the same strain as the silver Senators but touched upon the effects of the adoption of a gold standard upon the country at large. He declared, however, that McKinley was not a gold standard advocate, and if the proposed gold standard platform was adopted it would be done contrary to the Governor's wishes and convictions. He also asserted that Secretary Carlisle, who so recently had been loud in his denunciation of the demonetization of silver, was the first man to plan for a single gold standard. This the secretary had done in his Nashville speech and he had soon been followed by his chief, President Cleveland, in an announcement of his adherence to this position. Despite this the Republican party now proposed to follow the lead of the Democratic administration.

He referred to the issuance of bonds by the Cleveland administration which had, he said, aroused the antagonism of the country, but he declared the party was putting itself in such a position that it would be impossible for it to take advantage of this against the Democratic party. He did not say in so many words that he would leave the convention, but he left the impression that he would.

Senator Carter came out of the committee room and conferred with the silver delegates in waiting. He would say nothing, but left his friends for conference.

The States voting for the Teller amendment were as follows:

California—Allen B. Lemmon.
Idaho—Fred T. Dubois.
Nevada—A. C. Cleveland.
Utah—F. J. Cannon.
Colorado—H. M. Teller.
Montana—Charles Hartman.
North Carolina—M. L. Mott.
Wyoming—B. F. Fowler.

Also the members from Arizona and New Mexico.

Teller was cool throughout the debate.

After the Teller amendment was defeated by a vote of 10 to 41, the financial plank of the majority was taken up and the discussion resumed, the gold men having the floor. The plank is as follows:

"The Republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879, and since then every dollar has been as good as gold. We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are, therefore, opposed to the free coinage of silver, except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved. All our silver and paper currency now in circulation must be maintained at a parity with gold. We favor all measures designed to maintain inviolable the obligations of the United States and all our money, whether coin or paper, at the present standard, the standard of the most enlightened nations of the earth."

The silver members said they felt they were in sad hours of partisan dissolution but they would proceed as courteously and regularly as possible and not leave the party, until they had appealed to the court of last resort.

The Platform Committee finally adopted the financial plank proposed by the sub-committee, with slight amendments, by a vote of 40 to 11, Oklahoma joining the silverites.

The foreign plank is general in its nature, outlining a policy in regard to all current foreign questions. It contains a declaration for the protection of American citizens abroad; reaffirms the position of the party in favor of the Monroe Doctrine; indorses the Administration of President Harrison on the attitude of this country toward Hawaii; demands protection for American missionaries in Armenia; expresses sympathy for the Cubans in their war for independence, and takes a position in favor of awarding to them belligerent rights.

3:10 P. M.—The full committee adopted the platform as a whole and decided to report it to the Convention at 8 o'clock tonight.

The Silver members retired for conference and the platform was therefore adopted as a whole unanimously on a viva voce vote.

CREDENTIALS SETTLED.

The Work of the National Committee Is Fully Sustained.

ST. LOUIS, June 16.—The Committee on Credentials today adopted by a vote of 31 to 13 resolutions to ratify the findings of the National Committee in all contests except those from Delaware and Texas.

The committee settled the Texas contest by deciding to recommend seating the Grant faction, the vote being 28 to 16.

A resolution offered by Sutherland of New York to seat the Cuney faction was lost by 16 to 29.

Another resolution by Sutherland to seat both delegations, giving each delegate half a vote, failed, 14 to 29.

The Grant delegates are McKinley men.

The Cuneyites support Allison and Reed.

The committee will report this afternoon.

WARM, BUT ENTHUSIASTIC.

An Enormous Attendance at the Afternoon Session.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Long before the hour for the afternoon session the open galleries began to fill up, but the delegates and alternates were slow in arriving.

There was a general anticipation that at this session the most serious work of the convention would begin.

All the work of the convention except the nominations it was believed, would be cleared up at this session.

By 2 o'clock the galleries were solid walls of people and the delegates were again crowding their way to the floor.

The sergeant-at-arms' assistants buzzed like bees in all directions, looking after the comfort of the vast audience.

The heat was somewhat oppressive, and all the delegates had armed themselves with broad palm leaf fans.

The spectators also were similarly provided and the Convention Hall with these waving fans resembled nothing so much as a vast field of waving grain.

Throughout the hall rolled the dull hoarse roar that hangs over a great convention of people as it does over a great bustling city.

Conspicuously seated on the platform were Col. and Mrs. Fred Grant and ex-Senator Carter of Wyoming.

Several members of the National Committee wore the tri-colored plumes, which so long distinguished the followers of the "Plumed Knight."

A great floral shield of brilliant American Beauty roses and rich immortelles graced the platform.

The band discoursed lively and patriotic airs, "Marching Through Georgia" brought a response from the galleries that fairly made the rafters ring.

At 2:30 there were not a hundred unoccupied seats in the galleries, and the people still swarmed through the entrances. Fully 10,000 people were in the galleries.

The calling to order of the convention was intentionally delayed in momentary anticipation of the appearance of the Committee on Resolutions.

Some of the spectators manifested impatience in shrill shouts and cat calls, while an unknown with a strange voice occasionally interpreted his wolf-like howl, "Whoo—e—e—e," which never failed to excite a laugh.

Governor Bushnell, Mark Hanna and General Grosvenor of the Ohio big four, held an animated consultation with Mike De Young, George Knight, the eloquent California orator, and others just before Chairman Thurston dropped the gavel.

THE AFTERNOON'S WORK.

Historic Gavels Are Presented to the Presiding Officer.

By Associated Press to the Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—It was exactly 2:10 when Thurston again called the Convention to order.

Quiet came with the first crack of the gavel.

Chairman Thurston called upon Bishop Arnet, President of the Wilberforce College of Ohio, to come to the platform. The name of the divine evoked a round of applause. He was escorted to the platform by Delegate Hill (colored) of Mississippi.

As he took his place, the audience rose. He is of striking figure, clean shaven, of ebon color and a massive frame.

The Bishop gave thanks for "the blessings of liberty," which have been gained by our fathers in days gone by, and for the blessing of liberty given every race under American institutions. He spoke of the "wealth and culture" composing the Convention, gave thanks for Lincoln, who had broken the fetters of the slave, and for the organization which had opened the avenue to advancement to a race long oppressed. He asked that protection and civil liberty be given every man.

At the conclusion of the prayer, Chairman Thurston recognized T. B. Madden of Illinois, who, with a minute speech, presented the Chairman of the Convention with a gavel made from wood taken from the house once owned by Abraham Lincoln.

The gavel, he said, should be presented to the Chairman of the Convention.

Chairman Thurston accepted the gavel with a graceful little speech expressing the hope "that the inspiration of the immortal Lincoln may inspire our work here and hereafter," and promised to deliver it after the convention to the man who was to be the next President of the United States.

Before the cheering ceased, Denny of Kentucky, another gavel bearer, mounted the platform to present in behalf of the Young Men's Henry Clay Club of Lexington, Kentucky, a gavel cut from the place on the homestead of the great commoner of Ashland District, "the father of Protection."

In a speech of acceptance Temporary Chairman Fairbanks predicted Kentucky would be permanently Republican, thereby affording the Southern delegates a special opportunity to cheer.

Delegate Terrence of Minnesota, with an appropriate speech, presented to the Convention, a table made by some school boys of Minneapolis for the use of the National Republican Convention held in that city four years ago.

After accepting this table, with a graceful speech, Chairman Thurston called for the report of the Committee on Credentials.

A TIME LIMIT.

Chairman Thurston Anxious to Have the Credentials Settled.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Chairman Thurston informed the members of the Credentials Committee that forty minutes debate would be allowed on the report, twenty minutes for the supporters of the report of the majority for accepting the findings of the National Committee on all but Delaware and Texas contests and for seating the Higgins delegation from Delaware and the Grant men from Texas, and the same time for the minority report against these recommendations.

The majority report will be made by Fort of New Jersey and the minority by Hepburn of Ohio.

Hepburn complains bitterly because no more time is to be given, saying, "It is a gag rule."

The majority report is a formal one of the findings of the Committee.

The minority report declares the majority will give to the National Committee power to decide the personnel of the Convention, a power which no assembly should delegate to a subordinate.

READING THE REPORTS.

The Anti-McKinleyites First Openly Make a Showing.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—Delegate Fort of New Jersey, Chairman of the Committee mounted the platform and read the report of the Credentials Committee.

It ratified the action of the National Committee on all contests except Delaware and Texas, in which the National Committee made no findings.

The report recommended seating the Higgins delegation in opposition to the Addicks delegates in Delaware and Grant in opposition to the Cuney delegates in Texas.

The delegates recommended seating from Delaware are non-committal.

The Grant delegation from Texas is for McKinley.

The announcement of the findings of the committee was loudly applauded but there was a wild roar when Hepburn of Iowa presented a minority report protesting in the most vigorous terms against the majority report.

It was the first time the anti-McKinley shouters were given an opportunity and they made the most of it. Though a brief reception was given Hepburn it was a rousing one. The local Filley shouters were largely responsible for this.

Hepburn declared the Convention should not accept the roll call presented by the National Committee. To accept the roll unchallenged he insisted was a most dangerous precedent. He reviewed briefly some of the disputed cases. His reference to the contests in Louisiana, Alabama, and especially in Missouri, were loudly applauded.

The mention of the Missouri contest brought the Filley shouters in the galleries to their feet. For two minutes there were wild shouts for Filley.

The famous Missourian arose in acknowledgment of the enthusiasm of his followers.

The minority report recommended the seating of the Addicks and Cuney delegations of Delaware, and Texas, and a recommittal of all the other contests.

No sooner had Hepburn completed the presentation of the minority report than Chairman Fort of the Credentials Committee moved the previous question on the majority report.

Hepburn moved to substitute the minority report.

Chairman Thurston said the vote might be taken on each part of the report separately if separation was demanded and under the rules of the convention, twenty minutes on each side would be given to debate.

Mudd, of Maryland, asked for a separate vote on Delaware.

The chairman began: "The gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Senator Quay," when the Pennsylvania delegate rose, waving his hat and shouting "three cheers for Quay." Three cheers were given by the Pennsylvanians, while the Senator walked down the aisle, relaxed his usually stolid features into a smile and waived his thanks with a fan.

"The gentleman from Pennsylvania seconds the request," Chairman Thurston managed to interject.

The motion for the previous question was carried with a shout.

Then came the first convention demonstration of the so-called combine.

From the Maine section arose a delegate to demand the roll call on the question and from Iowa came another voice seconding the demand. Thereupon roll call began.

"I make a point of order," shouted Hepburn, "that several State delegations are contested and have no right to vote on this question."

Shouts of approval followed this point from the New England, Iowa and Pennsylvania delegations.

"The Chair overrules the point of order," responded Thurston promptly, his voice ringing out like a pistol shot across the field of heads strained forward to catch the decision.

The roll was now called, and the previous question was carried by a vote of 558½ to 356½.

This settled the Credentials report.

ADJOURNED TO TOMORROW.

The Great Contests Will Be Fought Out in Daylight.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—At 5:07 P. M. Grosvenor moved that the Convention adjourn until the next day at 10 A. M.

There was some opposition but the motion carried.

THE SILVER MEN'S PLANS.

They Will Not Make a Gallery Play During the Convention.

ST. LOUIS, June 17.—The Silver Republicans of the National Convention have practically decided, that whatever they may do in the convention or elsewhere, they will do nothing for mere theatrical effect.

They will present a substitute for the financial plank of the platform, for free coinage of silver and will consume whatever time may be allowed them for speeches in earnest presentation of their cause.

When the convention refuses to adopt their substitute and accept the gold standard platform, a number of the free silver delegates, especially those from the silver producing States, will simply walk out of the convention and proceed to quarters of their own where they will adopt a protest against the course pursued and appeal to the country for an endorsement of their course.

When this plan shall be put into execution will depend upon when the full committee shall be able to report.

It is not believed that this will be before three or four o'clock today.

It is now probable the silver men will name no candidate for the Presidency.

"The platform is completed. It contents are unknown. The Platform Committee concluded its labors behind closed doors and did not permit the privilege of the reporters of the United Press to listen to its labors."

The Washington Post, an Associated Press paper, appearing at the same hour, had nearly two columns about the platform, including the preamble and principal planks in full and a good summary of the planks in which there was general interest.

Attorney Talcott this afternoon filed a petition in insolvency in behalf of George Bates, principal of the Berkeley Gymnasium, at Atherton street, near Allston Way, Berkeley. The liabilities amount to $30,173.17 and the assets to $6583. The assets are bills outstanding against pupils of the institution as tuition. The creditors number about seventy-five and comprise people dealing in all kinds of supplies.

Bates' downfall is said by his attorney to be due to unprofitable and heavy investments in Tehama County in this State and at Wichita, Kansas.

ALAMEDA ALSO SETTLED

Gold Men Are Overwhelmingly Beatene in the Commi.tee on Platform.

AN ANTI-A. P. A. PLANK.

MANY DELEGATES ELECTED.

The Buckleyites Given the Coup de Grace in the Committee Report.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

THE PAVILION, SACRAMENTO, June 17.—The opening of the Democratic State Convention was delayed this morning on account of the Committee on Credentials not being ready to report.

After having taken the Alameda contest under advisement last night, the contest was re-opened this morning.

Affidavits were produced from a number of men in San Francisco who asserted that they had been induced by W. W. Foote to go to Alameda to assist him in carrying the primaries. The men assert that without their assistance Foote would have been defeated.

The contest for delegates at large to the Chicago Convention is developing into a bitter fight.

Daggett, who is credited with a desire to defeat Maguire, is said to have requested his friends this morning to support W. W. Foote.

In order to prevent Foote's election Maguire's friends, it is said, will throw their strength to J. V. Coleman.

John H. Hicks, Chairman of the Santa Clara delegation, today received a dispatch from B. D. Murphy of San Jose, requesting him not to place Murphy in nomination for delegate at large in the event of the adoption of a free silver plank by the convention.

WORK STARTS.

The convention assembled at 11:05 o'clock and the committee recommended that in the Alameda Township contest A. R. Baum, G. W. Dennis, J. H. W. Bradley and Fred Wild be seated.

In the Third Ward of Oakland the committee recommended that W. D. White be seated.

The committee reported unanimously in favor of seating the Junta delegation from San Francisco.

A. J. Clunie of San Francisco, holding a proxy from Solano, proposed an amendment to the motion to adopt the Committee's report. He suggested that each member of the contesting delegations be given a half vote. He made a long speech in support of the amendment in which he denied that the delegation of which he is a member is controlled by Buckley and repudiated the statement that the delegation would bolt the Convention regardless of the report of the Committee on Credentials.

Clunie's amendment was lost by an overwhelming vote and the report of the committee seating the Junta delegation was adopted.

THE PLATFORM COMMITTEE.

Chairman Gould appointed the following Committe of Platform and Resolutions after which the Convention took a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon to give the committee an opportunity to prepare a report.

W. A. Alford of Tulare, Chairman; I. S Hennesy, Nevada; H. C. Gordon, San Joaquin; Gillis Doty, Sacramento; W. W. Foote, Alameda; S. C. Nichols, San Joaquin; J. V. Coleman, San Francisco; Sam Braunhart, San Francisco; A. Camminetti, Amador; E. D. Edwards, Fresno; C. F. Dooling, San Benito; Harry W. Patton, Los Angeles; Raleigh Barker, Solano; D. M. Barker, Orange; C. W. Reed, San Francisco; C. Barbour, San Francisco; M. C. Hassett, San Francisco; E. L. Fitzgerald, Alameda; D. Homald, Colusa; James Colnon, Humboldt; Joseph Hamilton, Placer; T. J. Geary, Sonoma; J. D. Goodwin, Plumas; J. F. Burke, Marin; John McGonigle, Ventura.

The report of the Committee on Permanent Organization making the temporary organization permanent was adopted.

A resolution of respect to the memory of the late Dennis Spencer of Napa was also adopted.

THE PLATFORM.

When the Committee on Resolutions and Platform was called to order, John P. Irish offered a resolution endorsing Cleveland's administration as wise and just and declaring unqualifiedly in favor of gold as a standard. The resolution favored the retirement of small bills and gold below ten dollars so that a proper circulation of silver under that amount could be afforded. It opposed silver at 16 to 1, declaring California wedded to the gold standard.

By a vote of 29 to 4 the resolution was voted down, Burke, Arnold, Reed and Pond voting aye.

W. W. Foote offered the following silver plank: Resolved, That this convention denounces the act of the Republican Congress in demonetizing silver; that we are unalterably in favor of the double standard and of the enactment of such laws as will result in the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the rate of 16 to 1.

On the A. P. A. question Foote offered the following: Resolved, That the Democratic party, loyal to the principles of Americanism established by the founders of the Republic and true to the words and spirit of the American Constitution, declares its opposition to the introduction of any religious tests into our politics or any religious tests into our politics to what is known as the American Protective Association.

Sub-committees of five each were appointed to present before the Platform Committee suitable resolutions selected from the many submitted on various important questions.

Blanks were prepared endorsing the administration of Cleveland and Budd.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

The Third Congressional Fight Is Postponed to September.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

THE PAVILION, SACRAMENTO, June 17.—The Third Congressional Committee met at 2:30.

Foote called the meeting to order, and Ed Leake of Solano was elected Chairman and Judge A. F. St. Sure of Alameda Secretary.

Foote took the floor and suggested that nominations for Congress be laid over until later. He stated that the Republican Congressional Committee was so divided that it was advisable to await its decision.

Foote amended his motion so that Vallejo be designated as the place of meeting.

American Musicians Abroad.

The Parisian public has accorded the warmest reception to Clarence Eddy, the American organist, who has been giving some concerts at the Trocadero. A large number of French organists, among them Theodore Dubois, the new director of the Paris Conservatory, were present at the opening concert and led the applause. The papers state that Eddy, without doubt, can be classed among the greatest organists of the day, and this is a great confession for the Parisian press to make regarding a foreigner.

A great musical combine is announced from Italy. Ricordi and Sonzogno, the two great music publishers and impresarios, who have been rivals for so long, have pooled their interests. Both houses possess great power in the musical world, and combined they will practically own the Italian opera-houses.

A grand Handel festival was to have taken place at Leipsic this month under the direction of Kretschmer, conductor of the Riedelscher Verein. As the director has fallen very sick, however, the festival has been postponed till next autumn.

Anton Dvorak has not been idle since his return to Europe. It is announced that he has just finished not only two new quartettes for strings, but also three grand symphonic poems, of which the titles are: "The Sorcerer of the South," "The Man of the Waters" and "The Golden W-

My Friend Bogart.

BY THOMAS GAFFNEY TAAFE IN "THE LOOKER ON."

HE was a bashful man, was Bogart, bashful to the last degree—a rare quality, indeed, in one of his profession. Bashful lawyers and white crows are, to my mind, to be placed in the same category. But bashful Bogart certainly was, and abnormally so in the presence of ladies. He couldn't speak a half dozen words to a woman without manifesting an uncontrollable desire to swallow something, and the profusion and duration of his blushes were dangerously suggestive of apoplexy. He was a constant target for our jibes and jests, and an occasion of much polite wonder on the part of all his female acquaintances. These, it must be admitted, were few, for he avoided the sex with a degree of terror that was ludicrous. The sight of a petticoat would throw him into convulsions.

One afternoon in May I dropped into Bogart's office to while away an idle half-hour. This was a common occurrence, as his practice was not large, and he had plenty of time on his hands. As I entered the outer office I was surprised to see the trim figure of a young woman bending over the typewriter. This was certainly startling, as Bogart would not tolerate a female client much less a female employe. I was further mystified by the convulsive grin on the face of his managing clerk, an over-old young man with weak eyes and a generally wilted appearance. A nod from that functionary indicated that Bogart was within, and so, without any ceremony, I proceeded to his sanctum. His desk was in a disorderly condition, a most unusual thing for him. He was crouching, rather sitting in his chair, looking anxious and dishevelled. He looked the picture of abject misery.

"Hullo, old man," I exclaimed, "Busy?"

"Yes—no—that is, not very. Sit down," and he kicked a chair towards me.

"What's up?" I asked after a pause.

"Nothing," he answered, with a start then he looked out of the window and began to whistle softly. He always whistles and affects an air of nonchalance when least at ease, and I recognized the symptoms.

"Anything the matter?" I again essayed.

"With me? Oh, nothing. Why?" and he tried to look surprised. There was another awkward silence.

"What's new?" he asked.

"Nothing." Then I yawned—he continued to whistle.

"Why don't you tell me to get out if I'm in the way?" I asked, after a pause. He looked at me vacantly without answering, so I rose with the remark: "I guess I'd better go."

"What's the hurry? Sit down," he answered, holding out his hand to grasp mine, "well if you must go, good bye."

I stood a moment without taking his hand, and regarded him steadfastly.

"I was going," I said, "but as you're so infernally anxious to get rid of me, I'll stay."

"Suit yourself," he answered resignedly "Sit down and make yourself misc.able."

"I don't need to," I replied, and added significantly, "here."

There was another painful pause, during which I consumed a cigarette, and he continued to whistle. Then I made an other effort.

"Have you finished your business for the day?"

"Yes," he answered, and resumed his whistling.

"Then, let's go home."

"I'd like to go with you, old man, only—" he hesitated and looked towards the door, then leaning towards me, he asked in an awed whisper, "Has she gone?"

"She was there when I came in," I answered, I presumed he referred to the typewriter. He sank back in his chair and groaned. "So that's what's the trouble?" I continued. "Well, what's the matter with her? Isn't she pretty enough?"

"I don't know, I haven't looked at her."

"You haven't looked at her! Why you cold blooded anchorite, what ails you? If that's all that troubles you, though," I added, reassuringly, as he made no answer, "I can set your mind at rest. She's very pretty. I looked at her as I came in. Dark brown hair, blue eyes, good clear cut features—the chin is rather firm, I though rather determined, but not too—"

"Exactly what I thought," he interrupted. "That's just the trouble."

"But surely you don't object to it. To my mind it's a decided advantage. It's the lack of just that quality of determination that leaves so many women uninteresting."

"It's not a question of any individual quality," he interjected, impatiently, "it's the woman, herself, I object to."

"Then why on earth do you keep her? Why don't you discharge her?"

He looked at me in a helpless way and groaned. It was funny. I lay back in my chair and laughed immoderately.

"It's all very well for you to laugh in that way," he said in an injured tone, "you're not in my predicament."

"But, how came you to engage the girl if you dislike her so?"

"But I didn't engage her, my boy. She engaged herself."

"Oh, come; explain."

"Well, I advertised in this morning's paper for a young man as stenographer and typewriter, and, unfortunately gave my name and address. The first to answer the advertisement was this girl."

"That's interesting. Did she come in disguise?"

"No, confound it."

"Well, when I saw her I was knocked speechless."

"A consummation devoutly—" I began.

"Shut up, will you?" he retorted angrily. "I didn't know what to say. She calmly told me she had come for the position. I reminded her that I had advertised for a young man, and ventured the opinion that she was not of that—well, that persuasion. She promptly replied that she knew it, but wasn't particular—oh, she was very frank about it—said she could do the work better than a man and all that, all things considered, she would prefer to work for a man who was prejudiced against her sex. Then she calmly took off her gloves and hat, asked me what the salary was, and what kind of a typewriter I had, and practically settled herself in the situation before I could put in a word. So here she is, and that's my predicament."

As he finished he turned on me a face expressive of abject misery. I laughed. Then, with a gesture of impatience he turned away and gazed ruefully at his disordered desk—it was usually a model of neatness in its methodical arrangement of books and papers. My laughter was interrupted by a knock at the door and, in response to his nervous summons, she came in. A trim little person, I thought; simply, but tastefully dressed, and air of refinement, and modest reserve tempering her self-reliance, and saving it from becoming offensively aggressive. I thought I detected a twinkle of amusement in her eye as she approached poor Bogart's desk and asked:

"At what hour shall I report tomorrow morning?"

There was not a suggestion of doubt or hesitation in her manner as she spoke, dividing her attention between Bogart and a refractory glove. He blushed to his eyes, fingered his pen for a moment, nervously picked up a paper weight and dropped it on the floor, and, after an ineffectual struggle to swallow something, stammered:

"About—er—nine or—ten, or—er—in fact, Miss—"

"Talcott," she prompted, calmly.

"Oh, yes—er—Miss Talcott—I beg pardon—" then came a frantic effort to recover the paper weight and his breath at the same time, "—in fact—" he had succeeded in both endeavors "in fact—er—whenever it's convenient—whenever it suits you, you know—" then he plunged recklessly at a pile of papers.

"Very well, then, good evening," she replied, and with a slight bow that included both of us she turned and tripped out of the room. As she disappeared Bogart groaned and turned to me.

"That settles it," he said hoarsely. "I've done it, haven't I, old man?"

"You certainly have." I replied. "You've committed yourself now. There's no escape for you."

"So I have. What the devil am I to do?"

"Do! Why, congratulate yourself, to be sure. I wish I were in your place," and I went to the window.

"I wish you were," he answered.

From the window I could see her as she emerged from the building and crossing the street, hailed a car.

"By Jove, she's a neat little thing," I exclaimed, "and perfectly self-possessed. She can cross the street without assistance, and she knows, too, at which corner to stop the car. She's able to take care of herself."

He sat fully five minutes gazing dolefully at his desk, then, with a sigh, he made a desultory effort to establish some order in the chaos of books and papers. Failing, he rose with an imprecation and slammed down the cover of the desk. Then we descended to the street and walked home—that was our custom on fine days—neither speaking a word. He might have been going to the scaffold he was so woe begone, and when I bade him good night at his door, he only groaned and shook his head.

It was a long time before Bogart became reconciled to the situation, and Miss Talcott's presence during that period was a terrible ordeal for him. He would struggle to reach the office before her so as not to be obliged to pass her, and would wait in the evening until Mudge, the weak eyed clerk would signal to him that she had gone, and that the coast was clear. He had not the courage to speak to her, so he laboriously wrote all his letters, and, if it became necessary to have a document typewritten, he would send it to her by Mudge or the office boy. Again and again he bethought him of some scheme to rid himself of her, but as often gave up the idea in despair. Once he conceived the desperate plan of going on a month's vacation and discharging her by letter from the Adirondacks or some such inaccessible refuge, but his courage failed him at the last moment and he abandoned the design.

Gradually, however, he became accustomed to her presence, and his terror at it perceptibly diminished. The awful presence in petticoats began to lose its terrors for him, and one day, filled with a courage of which he hardly thought himself capable, he summoned her to him to dictate a letter to her. But when this step was taken and he heard the rustle of her dress as she seated herself by his side, his heart sank, and he dared not look at her. His memory seemed to fail him, and the words which ordinarily flowed without halt or hesitation, forsook him and left him speechless. He was confused and inarticulate, and the effort ended in a sad and pitiful failure. It was a full week before he had the fortitude to try again. By that time the recollection of his first failure had faded away and he had gathered fresh courage, so he made another effort, this time with more success. Elated by this triumph he persisted, following up his first success by repeated assaults and gaining ground at every engagement. Gradually he found himself acquiring confidence, and soon had mastered his shyness to such an extent that he could dictate with perfect equanimity.

One day while she was at work, her note book on her desk, he stole a glance at her. Frightened at his own temerity he immediately turned his gaze on the ceiling and began to whistle softly. But she did not notice him. Encouraged by her indifference he again cast a surreptitious glance in her direction. Then the fact suddenly dawned on him that she was pretty; and, strange to say, he confessed to an unmistakeable sensation of pleasure at the discovery. He was startled as well as pleased, for he had never looked a woman in the face before. He had often seen pictures of beautiful women—in the illustrated papers, in photographic collections, in the art galleries—but it was another thing to look at one in the flesh, to be speaking to her, to be near enough to touch her. The thought of his situation almost took his breath away.

Then he found himself wondering what her voice was like. Of course, he had heard it more than once, but the circumstances had been such that he had paid no attention to it. Now he listened to it, and found, to his pleasure as well as surprise, that it was sweet and musical. He would ask her to repeat portions of the letters he was dictating only to hear it, and would make desperate efforts to draw her into conversation that he might listen to it and watch the play of her features at the same time. But, like most men afflicted with abnormal shyness, he was singularly barren of ideas, and his efforts to overcome her reserve were fruitless. Like many another man so situated he then resorted to the device of planning out conversations and posting himself on certain subjects beforehand and then endeavoring to lead up to them in conversation; but he was no diplomat and if his memory did not fail him at the last moment his self possession did and left him in as bad a plight as ever. It galled him too, to hear her, through the open door, prattling away to Mudge; and he wondered why he could not draw her out as well.

But persistent, untiring assault will eventually beat down the most stubborn resistance, and soon he began to feel that he was gaining ground. Slowly she yielded to his persevering efforts, and the barrier between them gradually melted away. She would chat pleasantly with him and meet all his advances half way. His elation at his success knew no bounds. He soon found himself looking anxiously for her every morning, dreaming about her, repeating her name softly to himself and doing other irrational things. He would take lonely trips to the seashore, and long walks into the suburbs, and would spend his evenings and his Sundays alone, dreaming about her. He ascertained where she lived, and often in his walks—accidentally, of course,—would find himself in the vicinity of her home.

He did not understand what it all meant, until one morning the consciousness burst upon him with the suddenness of the traditional thunderbolt, that he was in love. He scouted the idea at first, and tried to convince himself that he was mistaken. What! he in love—he, who so cordially disliked the society of women, who shunned them as persistently as ordinary politeness would permit, who could not speak a dozen consecutive, coherent words to a woman; it was preposterous—and he laughed, and ridiculed the idea. But the truth, with that pertinacity which is one of its most striking characteristics, would not down, and he was forced eventually to acknowledge it.

CHAPTER II.

Here I must record an unusual phenomenon. With the realization of this sudden turn of affairs came a return of his old reserve, so that, just as their relations had begun to assume a semblance of cordiality, a new barrier seemed to rise between them. He would look forward, as before, to a pleasant tete-a-tete, when she would come to his desk, note book in hand, to receive his dictations; but, as in the earlier days, his courage would forsake him, and he would hardly be able to dispose of the business in hard. Sometimes, when he had really nothing for her to do, he would call her, with the intention of engaging her in conversation, but would falter at the last moment, and, to save himself from an embarassing situation, would dictate a rambling, incoherent letter to one John Smith, the inventive faculty, even in regard to names, was sadly undeveloped in him.

She of course noticed all this—she would have been blind and deaf if she had not—and, being a woman, she divined the truth. How the discovery affected her, I am not prepared to say. A man's imagination, even a vigorous and fertile one, has its limitations, and these he is most likely to realize when he attempts to account for a woman's actions or fathom her motives. All I know is that Bogart's sudden relapse into his former manner seemed to cause her, as well it might, first surprise, and then annoyance. Whether this was due to the consciousness that he was in love with her; or the fact that, being in love, he had not the courage to say so, I am not prepared to decide. I am content to note the fact that she assumed once more her quondam habit of reserve, showing no emotion at his frequent manifestations of embarassment, except, perhaps, an occasional sign of irritation.

Bogart's condition meantime became more and more aggravated. The longer he deferred the task of unbosoming himself, the more he yearned to speak; and the stronger his yearning grew, the greater grew his terror at the prospect. He began to neglect himself in many ways. He hardly ate or drank. He refused to indulge in any rational enjoyment. He was unable to sleep and spent his nights walking up and down his room. So day by day he let his opportunities slip from him and his goal seemed farther away than ever.

This was the state of affairs when, returning one day from court in his customary mood, he met a young man coming from his office. At another time he would have paid no attention to the circumstance, but as he then was he looked with suspicion on everybody he met, and especially on strangers who approached his office. This man certainly was not a client, unless a new one, which was the least of many possibilities. He did not look like a book agent, although he carried a small leather satchel. Bogart was still revolving these suspicions in his mind when he reached his door. On entering he noticed that Miss Talcott was alone. As she looked up, and her eyes met his, he blushed and passed hurriedly into his private office. He tried to give his attention to his work but to no purpose. That stranger, with his handsome face, would thrust himself in the way until, in sheer desperation, he determined on a bold step to rid himself of what might be, after all, a groundless jealousy. So he raised his voice, and called:

"Miss Talcott." Of course, he added to himself, the fellow came on some business. What foolishness this is. "Did that gentleman," he continued aloud, as Miss Talcott entered, "wish—er—to see me—er—personally?"

"No, sir," she answered, calmly.

"Oh—of course not—" he stammered. "But Mr. Mudge was not in. Were—um—were you able to—er—tell him what he wanted—er—to know?"

"Yes, sir," as calmly as before.

"Well—a—hum—well, what did he—did he want, Miss Talcott?"

"He wanted to see me," was the answer with the emphasis on the "me" and a snap of the firm jaws that seemed calculated to silence all further questioning.

"Oh," gasped poor Bogart, and his chair, which he had tilted nervously backward, came down with a crash. He felt the blood rush to face and only able to gasp: "I—I beg your pardon," and plunged recklessly into his papers. He was too confused to see the smile of satisfaction which lighted up her face as she went back to her machine, and, if he had, he would hardly have known how to interpret it.

This was the commencement of a season of indescribable torment for Bogart. That stranger's face danced continually before his eyes; multiplied a hundred-fold, it peopled all his dreams—it filled his waking thoughts; it threatened to drive him insane.

To aggravate the matter a few days after this occurrence, he found in the morning mail a letter addressed in a strong masculine hand, to Miss Talcott. Thereafter, at varying intervals—once, twice or even three times a week—letters in the same handwriting would arrive. Bulky letters they were too, as if the writer had much to say, or, at least, required many words in which to say it. He hated the sight of them, and the temptation to burn them was more than once upon him. He would turn them over and over in his hand and seek to descry in the handwriting characteristics by which he might connect them with the stranger. But suddenly a ray of hope burst upon him. Might not this mysterious rival be, after all, only her brother. At the thought he laughed, and ridiculed his suspicions. Then, in view of the voluminous letters, the utter improbability of such a solution presented itself to him and he was plunged again in despair.

About a month after his first meeting with the stranger he was again coming through the hall when his door opened and, as before, the hated rival stepped forth, and, with that brisk and business-like air that so irritated Bogart, walked past him and started down the stairs. The sight of the stranger stirred up all the bitterness that had been brewing for the last month, and it was with difficulty he resisted an impulse to run after his rival and push him down the stairs. But he did resist it, and, with an air of enforced calm entered the office. Miss Talcott was out, and he was conscious of a feeling of exultation at the other fellow's disappointment. Then a brilliant scheme suggested itself to him. He would settle his doubts at once—he would find out who this mysterious stranger was—he would know whether or not he was right in his surmise. When she returned a half-hour later he called her to him and began: "Miss Talcott,"—he was trembling violently and he could feel a cold perspiration breaking out all over him—"did—er—did Mudge tell you—er—did he give you a message?"

"No, sir," she answered.

"Oh, he forgot it, perhaps—er—ask him about it. Your brother was here, you know"—he tried to look searchingly at her but his gaze faltered even more than his speech.

"My brother?" with a rising inflection, and an inquiring look in the wide eyes.

"Oh, I beg pardon," he stammered, isn't he—I mean—er—you?"—he was going to say "father" at a venture, but checked himself in time; then he thought of substituting "uncle," but decided that that would be rather improbable, and ended ignominiously with—"I mean the gentleman who—who was here the other day, you know."

"Oh," she exclaimed, with a laugh and a sharp glance at him, "you mean Mr. Curtis." Bogart was not too embarrassed to make a mental note of the name—"thank you, sir." Then, with a smile, she returned to the outer office, leaving him to his reflections.

As the door closed behind her poor Bogart sank back in his chair, a picture of abject, inconsolable misery. His worst fears were realized, there could no longer be any doubt. She was slipping away from him—he was giving her up without a struggle to this other fellow. At the thought of his rival he gnashed his teeth, and, springing to his feet, paced angrily up and down the little office.

And so passed another week of misery for poor Bogart. He tried to forget her, but could not; he tried to shut out the memory of his discomfiture, but failed ignominiously. The face of his rival was ever present to his mental vision, taunting him with his defeat, and driving him almost to desperation. And, as if to aggravate this feeling of chagrin, on looking up one day from his work, at the sound of a strange voice, he saw the hated Curtis bending over her typewriter desk, laughing and chatting gaily with her. He angrily ordered Mudge to shut the door, saying that there was a draught and behind that protecting screen he vented his wrath on his unresisting books and papers.

But he did not give up yet. That hope which springs eternal sustained him. Full of desperate resolve, he determined to make one more effort. It was a forlorn hope, and he hardly dared dream of success. In spite of the apparent futility of the project, however, he decided to gather all his forces, and make another attack on the citadel of her heart. He would invegle her into conversation, lead adroitly up to the subject, and spring the momentous question at the most favorable opportunity. This was his plan, but he had made such plans before, alas! how often. However, he felt that it was his last chance, and went at it determined to do or die. Full of this high purpose, he summoned her one day to his desk, and, clearing out his throat, prepared for the ordeal. As she approached, he bent his gaze industriously on a magazine, which he held in his hand, and pretended not to see her. She spoke to him, and he looked up.

"Oh, it's you, Miss Talcott!" he exclaimed, with poorly affected surprise. "Excuse me—a—a—I didn't notice you. I was interested in a story in a—a story—here—" he laughed an embarrassed little laugh. "It was about a fellow, you know, who was in love—and—and—he was so bashful he was afraid to tell the girl. Funny, wasn't it?"

She made no answer.

"Do you," he resumed, nervously, "I—I felt sorry for the poor dev—I beg pardon—the poor fellow. I don't know why."

"Perhaps," she suggested, "it was a fellow feeling."

"Dear me, no," he said, with a start, "I—I'm not bashful—not at all."

"No?" turning her eyes full on him. "Nor in love, either?"

He flushed as he met her gaze and his heart sank. Pushing back his chair, he rose, and walked towards the window, whistling softly; then suddenly he began to dictate one of those long, rambling John Smith letters that were so often written, but never mailed. When she had gone out, and closed the door behind her he threw up his hands, and gave himself over to despair. His last effort had failed, and misery, of which there is no telling, was his. He had been too much embarrassed to notice the look of grim determination on her face as she left him, and in the outer office Mudge was too far from her to hear what she muttered to herself, as she bent over her desk; but he saw her close up her typewriter with a determined air, and turn her attention to writing a letter. This done, she folded and sealed it, and placed it in her reticule, closing the clasp with a determined snap that made Mudge jump in his chair. It was evident that a crisis was at hand.

The next morning as Bogart approached the office, he saw her before him and slackened his pace so as not to overtake her. He had not the courage to meet her eyes and waited until she had entered before he followed her. She was standing beside her desk taking off her gloves when he opened the door. She had not yet removed her hat, and he thought she never looked prettier. He flushed as he passed her and averted his gaze.

In the mail which had been placed on his desk, was a letter for her, and a glance at the superscription told him whence it came. The handwriting was as familiar as his own. He longed to tear it up and consign it to the waste-basket, but restrained himself. He looked up and saw that she had followed him into the private office, and was standing by his desk, respectfully awaiting an opportunity to address him. At the sight of her he shrank involuntarily into his chair. He handed her the letter that had aggravated him so much, and waited in evident embarrassment for her to go. She stood for a moment looking at the missive, but without opening it. His agitation was rapidly becoming more marked.

"Mr. Bogart," she commenced, with a slight hesitation in her speech and manner, "I suppose I ought to tell you that I am going to leave you in about two weeks."

"Wha—what?" he gasped; then after looking at her for a moment, he asked: "Why, Miss Talcott?" with a vague misgiving that his action of yesterday had something to do with her departure.

"Well, sir," she answered shyly, "the fact is, I'm going to get married."

Bogart dropped the book which, in his nervousness, he had picked up, and stared at her almost in terror.

"Going—to be—married!" he gasped. Then, after a pause, he added, meekly, and with a note of despair in his voice that was almost ludicrous, "To—to Mr. Curtis?"

"To Mr. Curtis," she assented calmly.

Bogart was rapidly losing control of himself. This was not unusual, but he was doing it now in a way that was rare for him.

"No," he exclaimed, excitedly, "you must not, Miss Talcott, you must not."

"Sir!" she exclaimed.

"You must not," he continued, rising from his chair, his agitation increasing, "not until I have told you all that has been in my heart and almost on my lips for these many months." And then and there he plunged into a passionate avowal of his love for her; he told her of his fruitless efforts to unbosom himself to her; he pleaded, protested, entreated. In his excitement all his shyness and all his reserve were cast aside, and on the impulse of the moment he was accomplishing that at which he had failed after months of careful, methodical planning, and systematic rehearsing. His fervor lent an eloquence to his tongue that it had never known before. He forgot that he was talking to another man's promised wife, and assured her again and again that she was all the world to him, and so on and so on, in the same old time-honored strain. She did not check him as it might be expected she would, and as he finished she turned towards him. Her face was flushed, and her hand trembled slightly as she laid it on his.

"Mr. Bogart," she said, earnestly, "do you mean that?"

"I do," he answered, fervently, "every word. If I could call you my wife I would be the happiest man alive."

"Then," she said, simply, "I am yours."

For a moment he was staggered, then without a word, without a thought for the man whose place he was taking, he clasped her in his arms. And then—well, she laughed and said, her new hat was crushed beyond recognition; and he said it didn't matter—he'd buy her a half-dozen. Then he recollected the other fellow and asked, with a puzzled look:

"But what'll Curtis do?"

"Curtis?" she answered, smiling, "who is Curtis?"

"The man you were going to marry."

"There is no Curtis," she replied, "and if there were, I wouldn't marry him."

"But you told me—you said"—he was losing his self-control again—"who is that strange young man I met here several times?"

"He?" Oh he came to repair the typewriter; I don't know his name. And the letters," she added, with a laugh, "I wrote myself."

"But what—what does it all mean?" he stammered in bewilderment.

"Listen," she said with sudden earnestness, laying her hand on his arm, "and if you really mean what you have just said you will not think the less of me for what I have done. I knew from the first how you felt towards me—oh! trust a woman to find out a thing like that—and I, well—" she paused and laughed. She was blushing and her blushes became her. "I saw, though," she continued, "that the knowledge of your love unnerved you, and left you unable to say what you were dying to tell me. So I—well, I helped," and she looked up at him and laughed again. "Jealousy, you know, will make even a bashful man speak. And now—" the remainder of her speech was smothered into an inarticulate murmur, and Mudge, who came in unannounced at this moment, stopped with a gasp, blinked once or twice, and precipitately retreated.

And yet there are those who doubt that love will find a way.

WEDNESDAY.....JUNE 17, 1896.

Barney Barnato who went to the jail in Pretoria with a check for half a million of dollars to pay the fines of the four reformers, probably knew the value of his men in relation to mining interests. But when he reached the jail, some one else knew their value, and had stepped in and paid the fines. What a fine thing it is to be appreciated in that way, when one is in hoc! Barney with half a million freely tendered, would be called a brick, even among the stolid Dutch of Pretoria.

The sugar King, Havemeyer, recently undertook to import pheasants eggs from England to be hatched artificially to stock his game preserves in New Jersey. But he could not get them past the custom house. Not even the sweetness of sugar could prevail. The New York Collector read for the instruction of the game bird man this section of the law: "Eggs of birds, fish, and insects free; provided, however, that this shall not be held to include the eggs of game birds, the importation of which is prohibited except for scientific collection." And now the Department at Washington is asked to rule on the question whether the restriction does not apply solely to the eggs of game chickens?

A contributor to the Philadelphia Times traces the origin of the rubber tire to a Belfast doctor in 1889. He conceived the idea of taking a piece of garden hose, wrapping it around the wheel of his son's bicycle, welding the two ends together with melted rubber and thus forming the first pneumatic tire. This gave a cushion to the periphery of the bicycle and made its mounting of obstacles easy and cushion-like. Dunlop had a friend in the person of a well-to-do Irishman named Harvey DuCros, who abandoned the business he was engaged in and risked his wealth in the formation of a company that had for its object the exploitation of a pneumatic tire for a bicycle. It was capitalized at $100,000, and fifteen months later—that was in the early part of 1891—it declared a dividend of 10 per cent., or $10,000 in all, and added $10,000 to its surplus fund. Two years later that same company declared a dividend of $2,500,000. One year ago the rights of that organization were sold to a British syndicate for $15,000,000 and the purchasing party capitalized the company at $20,000,000 and openly asked for subscriptions to that amount. The proffers were nearly three times the amount of the capital stock. In Belfast at one bank alone, where books were opened, $1,000,000 was subscribed in less than three hours.

The Danger of Slopping Over.

Senator White, who has just returned to California, was interviewed on his way home at the town of Gallup in New Mexico. If the interviewer has reported him correctly, Senator White made the following declaration:

"I would be heartily in favor of amending the constitution so as to give Congress power to impose a tax upon all incomes. The decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax bill I regard as a great misfortune, not only because of its direct bearing upon the problem of raising revenue, but because it reversed the precedents of a century and discredits the court itself. The dissenting opinions of White and Harlan seem to me unanswerable. After that first decision I would not have voted for an income tax of anys sort that could be drawn in conformity with the doctrine laid down by the court. A just income tax is needed to provide reserve, and I think the people generally are in favor of such methods of raising money to meet the expenses of the government."

There is a flavor of old Bourbonism in this declaration. There never was the least occasion for an income tax in these last days. A more unpopular law was never placed for a time on the statute book. If the tariff had been let alone, the revenue would have been sufficient without the aid of any income tax. The latter was a free trade measure. It was introduced to bridge over a financial crisis brought on by the supporters of that law. It was a good day when the Supreme Court knocked that measure on the head. It is an evil day for any politician who has learned so little since that event, as to shoot off his mouth in favor of a dead proposition.

An Appeal to the Country.

The Republican platform is the full and explicit declaration of principles which will govern the next administration. It is an appeal to the country for its sanction. There is hardly a doubt as to the result. It keeps nothing back. The Republicans have never made any concealments of a national policy. On the two great issues, finance and protection, it stands by the principles which have guided the party since it came into existence. It is the champion of American industry. The platform reviews in substance, the outline of that policy. It is squarely for a national revenue ample for all needs to be raised by a tariff. It is for sound money represented by gold, silver and paper.

The Republican platform is a declaration of American policy as against a foreign one. It will not suit the English and other free traders who have been striving for years to obtain control of the home market. The Republican policy has never suited foreigners. They have always railed against it. There is nothing so complimentary to that policy as foreign denunciation. The home market is first and last for Americans. All the range of industries is to be fostered and encouraged by the government.

It is a remarkable circumstance that just as the declaration for sound money was enunciated at St. Louis, President Cleveland was in effect, making an appeal to the Democratic party soon to be represented in the Chicago Convention, to make a similar declaration. He could not believe that his own party was about to desert him in this last extremity. But there is every prospect that his entreaties will be of no avail, and that sound money will have no place in the Democratic platform. It is well that the battle should be fought out on such a distinct issue.

The Republican platform is an aggressive one. It is a tremendous indictment of the present administration. It charges to that account the calamities that have over taken the country. "It has been a record of unparalleled incapacity, dishonor, and disaster." This declaration does not need any qualifications. It has crippled American industry and stimulated foreign production. It has borrowed money and created a large public debt in time of peace. It has destroyed business confidence and created distress in all the industrial ranks of the country. This is the sum of the indictment.

The Republican party points to the record for thirty years for a vindication. In all that time there was never such a paralysis of business, nor such an army of laborers out of employment. What it has done for the country in the past, it promises to do in the future. It will restore business confidence by a steadfast adherence to the principles set forth in the platform, which are none other than those which have been incorporated in its entire history. It will also maintain a vigorous foreign policy. It will recognize the cause of the Cuban patriots and will unfurl the American flag in Hawaii. The force and directness of Blaine will be felt once more in all the foreign relations of the country. It has been waiting for this new inspiration. It will revive the hopes of the nation. The platform faces a crisis in the industrial affairs of the country. It is the declaration of a party which, to all appearances, will in a few months control the administration of the country.

The Bolters and the Bolted.

There is a great deal of talk in these days about bolters who will bolt from the two great political parties, if the platforms don't happen to suit them. Speculations have been rife as to the strength of the gold element who will bolt from the Chicago Convention in case the silver men make the platform; —the number and influence of the men who will bolt from the Republican Convention if the gold men make the platform.

These threatened movements have probably been over estimated. When a Republican for instance, bolts because he cannot have every expression of a platform to suit him, he will generally find short commons every where else. He does not carry any great amount of strength with him. The bolt generally hurts him much more than it hurts the party. There is room enough in the Republican party for men of all shades of opinion touching financial questions. They have the utmost liberty of thought and action. There is the same room in the Democratic party.

The men who bolt never find things to their mind or, the outside. A few bolters never disrupt a great party. Their influence is generally greatly over estimated. It is especially so in these days when there are so many who assume that bolting means the defeat of either of the leading parties. It means nothing of the kind.

Gen. Francis A. Walker, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has contributed a very suggestive paper to the June number of the Atlantic Monthly on the "Dangers of Immigration." He points out among other things the complete exhaustion of the public lands: "Fifty years ago a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres could be had at the minimum price of $1.25 an acre, or for merely the fees of registeration. Under these circumstances it was a very simple matter to dispose of a large immigration. Today there is not a good farm within the limits of the United States which is to be had on these conditions. The wild and tumultuous scenes which attended the opening to settlement of the territory of Oklahoma a few years ago, and, a little later, of the so-called Cherokee strip testify eloquently to the vast change in our national conditions in this respect."

He points out that between 1880 and 1890 five and one quarter millions of foreigners entered our ports. These have brought on a crisis in the labor market:

"No nation in human history ever undertook to deal with such masses of alien population. That man must be a sentimentalist and an optimist beyond all bounds of reason who believes that we can take such a load upon the national stomach without a failure of asimilation, and without great danger to the health and life of the nation. For one, I believe it is time that we should take a rest, and give our social, political, and industrial system some chance to recuperate. The problems which so sternly confront us today are serious enough without being complicated and aggravated by the addition of some millions of Hungarians, Bohemians, Poles, South Italians and Russian Jews."

Now and then sentimental women think it a nice thing to sympathize with murderers and criminals. Scott Jackson, the murderer of Pearl Bryan, has been sentenced to be hanged for one of the most brutal crimes on record. A teacher in one of the Public Schools of Newport, Ky., where the crime was committed, sent presents to the murderer. The Board of Education of that city has refused to re-employ her in the schools. A young woman who indulges in such a sickly sentimentality is unfit to teach in any public school.

That kind old pork-packer is now very sorry that he contributed to Mrs. Carter's theatrical education. He was bled to the tune of about $20,000, when he was sued for $65,0000. Fairbanks had only a platonic interest in the woman. He thought she might make a star actress. Belasoko the go between, did his best to make Fairbanks a star financial performer.

It costs one dollar a ton to transport iron ore and other metal freights from the head of Lake Superior to Cleveland—which fact has induced John D. Rockfeller to make plans for the establishment of a great metal plant at Cleveland. The difference in freight between Pitsburgh and Cleveland from Lake Superior is 75 cents a ton.

On a Stocked Stream.

I had just got my rod together, and was hooking on a worm when the owner of the brook, a sturdy and somewhat ill-looking farmer, appeared on the bank beside me. I offered a short salutation, and received one in return considerably shorter than my own.

"Any trout in this brook?" I asked.

"Chuck full on 'um."

"You allow fishing here, of course?"

"Yaas, of the pay is all right.

"How much?"

"Five dollars a trip, now she's stocked."

"Oh, she's stocked, is she? Well I'll give you $5; in advance too."

He pocketed the money, and I swashed down the brook, a basketful of half-pounders swimming before my dazzled vision. In the first three miles the only bite I had was from my coat pocket. I spent an hour casting in "The Pool," another one through "The Cut" and finished out the afternoon skirmishing around the shores of the "Pond." Then night came on, and I was glad. If ever I have an evil deed to perform, anything like murdering an able-bodied farmer, I prefer to do it after dark. On my way to the station I stopped at the house of the farmer and inquired for him.

"Pa's gone tur the village," said the boy; "he got some money turday, so he's gone over tur git some groceries."

"Your father told me the brook was stocked," I said fiercely.

"So 'tis."

"I don't believe there's a trout in it over an inch long."

"I don't nuther," said the boy; "pa didn't stock it tell las' summer."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Bill's Golden City.

In front of a Dakota sod cabin sat a man about 50 years old, who was ragged and faiorn and hungry looking. A few rods away lay the dead body of a mule, and beyond that was a wagon with a broken wheel. There was no smoke coming out of the cabin chimney, no fowls or live stock about, and no other human being to be seen.

"Well," queried the man as I looked about, "things look sorter lonesome, eh?"

"Indeed they do sir. What's been the matter with you?"

"Billyus fever."

"Where is the wife?"

"Inside the house with the same thing."

"And the children?"

"Out thar' behind the haystack shakin' with the ager."

"I see your'e lost your mule?"

"Died two day ago, sir. Can't rightly say what ailed him, but he's gone."

"I suppose you are dead broke on top of all?" I queried.

"Havn't got a red cent, sir, and nuthin' but cornmeal in the house," he replied.

"Well, I don't blame you for feeling blue over the situation."

"Who's a feelin' blue?"

"Why, I expect you are."

"Then you make a big mistake, stranger. Things did look a leetle blue last week, but three days ago I had this 'ere farm cut up into 2990 town lots and arfanged with a critter to boom it, and I'm feelin' like a steer in a cornfield. Two thousand lots at $100 aplece, six railroads to cross yere, three big earworks acomin', schools, churches, factories, parks, hotels—why durn my hide, but I jist sot here calkerlatin' on startin' five banks and foundin' two or three orphans asylums with my money!"

"Then I can't aid you?"

"Jist a pipe o' terbacker and a nip of whiskey, stranger, and you tell everybody down the road that ole Bill Johnson has founded the town o' Golden City and is goin' to plant gold watches for mile posts all over the stait. Feelin' blue? Waal, I should rayther guessle to observe that he has to keep hold of the grass to prevent his flyin away fur joy and exultashun!"

NOTES AND EXCERPTS.

A firm of New York watchmakers recently filled an order for a watch for Nicholas II. They have received a letter from him acknowledging the receipt of the watch and saying that he is highly pleased with it. The watch is of the open-face pattern, and has a split-second attachment and a calendar of the moon and sun. The calendar is perpetual, and makes allowances for short months and leap years. It has five small dials distributed about the large dial. The back of the case is elaborately decorated with the imperial crown surmounting the Czar's monogram.

A touching account is given by the friends of Sir John Millais of the distinguished painter's state. He cannot speak, and can only communicate with those around him by writing. But in spite of all that he is suffering he keeps his good spirits wonderfully, never loses his patience and is at all times full of thought for those around him. Indeed, it is said that hardly one of his written communications to the watchers by his bed has any reference to himself or his own wants. It is always of others that he seems to be thinking.

Mr. Gladstone has simplified matters for his biographer by carefully assorting and arranging his correspondence. He has selected 60,000 letters for publication, and has built a fireproof room for their safe keeping.

The life of Thomas Hughes was divided between politics, literature and the law. He had, moreover, strong religious interests. In the best sense of the term he was a many-sided man and his death has evoked many estimates of his work in half a dozen different directions.

Ex-Secretary Whitney is said to have remarked to an old college friend the other day, apropos of his refusal to be considered a presidential candidate, that he "would rather be called Bill Whitney than President Whitney." He enjoys his freedom and friends better than fuss and feathers.

Senator Blackburn of Kentucky carries no less than three rabbits' feet for luck, and especially to protect him from the insidious wiles of the gold bugs.

A dealer in men's furnishing goods in one of the large Eastern cities furnishes indisputable proof of the growth and magnitude of the bicycle craze. Although his display of walking sticks was never finer with the latest devices in whangee and other woods, he says they are a drug on the market. His trade in canes for the last month fell off 75 per cent, which he thinks is altogether due to the fact that so many well-dressed men ride the bicycle, and of course they have no use for canes.

The children at Bethlehem are told by their mothers that on Christmas eve a choir of angels alwayssing above the place where Christ was born. Travelers say that on this evening scores and sometimes hundreds of children may be seen in the open air, looking up into the sky, waiting to hear the angels sing.

Elisee Reclus having proposed that a globe 118 feet in diameter be built somewhere as an exact model of the earth, Alfred Wallace suggests as an improvement that the globe be concave and all the details be looked at from the inside.

As warden of a women's prison and as prison commissioner, Mrs. Ellen C. Johnson has served in Massachusetts for nearly twenty years. She is said to have a remarkable influence over the women prisoners, and in many cases has reformed them.

In the Jungle Book Rudyard Kipling puts in the mouth of Mowgli, the mancub, a striking oath—"By the bulls that followed Io!" A contemporary thinks that Kipling must have picked this up in Vermont. Matthew Lyon, the Irishman whom that State sent to Congress and who had a fight in front of the Speaker's desk with our Mr. Griswold, came to this country as a "redemptioner;" his first master, a Connecticut farmer, traded him off to a Vermonter for a pair of horned critters; and Lyon's pet oath in later life was, "By the bulls that redeemed me!"

Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria is not allowed to fix the order of the toasts at the royal dinner parties in his own palace. The Czar of Russia is not an easy boss.

Two cynical traditions about women, one that she is stingy and the other that she cannot keep a secret, have been dispelled by the action of Mrs. Brinckerhoff, who gave $100,000 to Barnard College and kept it a secret.

A correspondent who recently visited the Empress Eugenie contradicts the reports as to her ill health. The Empress, who is now 70, was looking exceedingly well and very handsome for a woman of her years. Her features still preserve their clear-cut beauty. Her eyes are bright and her hair, which is quite white, adds much to her air of distinction. Like Queen Victoria she has not put aside her mourning, and probably never will, but the crepe is less depressingly deep, and she sometimes wears a small bunch of violets fixed at her collar.

A South African millionaire gave a dinner in London recently, at which every lady was presented at dessert with a large uncut diamond from the South African mine in which the millionaire was interested.

Kipling's Australian Policy.

Rudyard Kipling, says Current Literature, gives out this explanation of the statement in an Australian newspaper that "Rudyard Kipling landed on this island at 12 o'clock, and at 12:16 o'clock he had formulated an Australian policy:" "A young reporter cornered me just after I landed. I treated him kindly, but said firmly that I was not to be interviewed. 'I have not thought of interviewing you,' replied the reporter, with a sadness in his voice; 'I ask a much greater favor than that.'" It turned out that the reporter had an Australian policy that he knew would be of the greatest benefit to the country. No paper would print it. His modest request was that Kipling would let him put forth his theory as the scheme of the novelist. "They will print it," he said, "if I give it as coming from you." "All right," agreed Kipling, "fire ahead." So the young reporter got in four mortal columns telling the people of Australia how to run the country. "I never read the article," said Kipling; "but there must have been amazing theories in it from the storm it raised."

CAPITAL STOCK.....$100,000
1000 shares at $100 each, payable at $1 per month upon each share. The most simple plan in the world to make money with practically no risk.

PURPOSE OF ORGANIZATION.

The California Investment Company is organized for the benefit of all its stockholders, and not for the purpose of bestowing wealth and power on a favored few, also to enable small investors to combine and gain equal advantages with capitalists in making investments, to buy, sell and deal in Real Estate, to borrow and make loans, and to provide for a life income during one's later years.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR SMALL INVESTORS.

The California Investment Company is organized for giving parties of small capital an opportunity for a safe and profitable investment, those who can spare but a few dollars at a time have long to wait before they can save enough to buy a lot and then they have to pay the retail price, which is much greater than that which land can be purchased for in large tracts. By depositing a few dollars with the California Investment Company you will place it where it will be consined for your benefit, with the money of others like yourselves. The Company purchases property at wholesale prices, then subdivides and sells the same at retail prices. Money invested where property is rapidly increasing in value will some time double and in all cases will bring a larger return than interest.

The California Investment Company desires to call your attention to their most simple co-operative system for making money. The plan of investing in the Company is the most simple in the world. The value of one share is one hundred dollars, payable at one dollar per month, no more, no less. This money is paid into the treasury of the Company and invested by the Board of Directors who are selected by the Stockholders once a year.

"In Union there is Strength," any person investing money in the California Investment Company will receive more profits from the amount paid in than any investment they can make. It is only by the combination of your savings with those of others that your money is given power equal to that of all millionaires.

In these exceptionally bad times it is gratifying to know that there is still left an opportunity to make money and especially at this present time the California Investment Company believes now is the time to invest.

It is useless to say to you that in order for the California Investment Company to secure success, great experience, tact, judgment and discretion are necessary. All of these most important elements are intrusted to representative business men of this city who compose the Board of Directors.

SEVERELY SHOCKED.

Northern Japan Is Visited by a Series of Furious Earthquakes.

HEAVY LOSS OF LIFE.

Over a Thousand Said to Have Perished in the Disaster.

A TIDAL WAVE FOLLOWS.

One Town Believed to Have Been Completely Swept Away.

(Copyrighted 1896 by Associated Press.)

YOKOHAMA, June 17.—The news of a terrible earthquake, involving the loss of over a thousand lives, has reached here from the island of Yesso, which contains the northern provinces of Japan, including Shirebeshe, Oshima, Furi, Hiiala, Tokachi, Ishikari, Kirsehiro, Teshiwo, Kitzmi and Nemoto.

All these sections of the island seem more or less shaken.

The subterraneous disturbance lasted about twenty hours, and during that period the utmost terror prevailed.

The ground rumblings are described as resembling the roar of distant cannons.

Shock followed shock in almost uninterrupted succession. In all it is estimated 150 shocks occurred.

It is impossible at present to give accurate details of the disaster as communication between the mainland of Japan and the island of Yesso, from which the former is separated by straight Tsugaru (Sangar,) is interrupted or, more likely, in the hands of the authorities.

The whole town of Kumaishi, however, is reported destroyed by a tidal wave which accompanied the earthquake.

The Island of Yesso has in the past had several similar visitations and contains a number of active and extinct volcanoes. Rumor has it that the number of lives lost and damage done is far in excess of the figures contained in the first dispatch.

A full official report has been asked for and is expected shortly.

It is feared disasters to shipping must have resulted from the tidal wave.

TRYING TO BE TEACHERS.

A Large Number of the Applicants, Though, Are Being Dropped.

J. H. Bicheff of Alameda, one of the members of the County Board of Education, called at the office of County Superintendent of Education Garlick this morning, and announced that a large percentage of the young people who had aspired to obtain teacher's certificates in the County Schools, had been dropped from the list. The applicants have been undergoing examination by the County Board since yesterday. The first study in which they were examined was arithmetic. In it, each of them was expected to answer 60 per cent of the questions propounded. The result, however, showed that the majority of them were short on that study because out of sixty-six applicants forty were dropped from the roll.

The twenty-six who remained were examined in spelling today. Tomorrow they will be examined in grammar and on Friday in defining.

It is expected that a number of those who are now successful may yet fail to pass the examination. The members of the County Board of Education comprise A. P. B. Lynch, J. H. Bicheff, S. D. Waterman, W. H. Ludlow and J. P. Garlick.

HIGH IN COURT.

His Examination for Criminal Libel Is Set for June 26th.

Editor High this morning appeared in the Police Court to answer two charges of criminal libel preferred by William J. Dingee. High was unaccompanied by counsel. He waived the reading of the complaint and by consent the preliminary examination on one of the charges was set for the 26th. The setting of the other was postponed to that time.

Later High applied to Prosecuting Attorney McIvlyn for a complaint against Mr. Dingee. His statement of facts did not, however, constitute a cause of action and it was refused.

The Grand Jury.

The Grand Jury will re-assemble tomorrow after a recess of more than two weeks. It is expected that it will resume the consideration of the Whidden matter and incidentally look for a report from Expert Snow, who, for two weeks past, has been comparing the stubs of the tax receipts, in the office of the Tax Collector, during Mr. Rosborough's incumbency.

Root's Examination.

The case of Andrew Root, the alleged gold brick man, went over till tomorrow in Judge Greene's Court, this morning. The continuation was taken to enable a quantitative analysis to be made of the various metals which are supposed to enter into the composition of the alleged gold bricks which figure in the case.

The Santos Case.

A. De Santos, the colored man of Alameda, who has been found guilty of assault upon a little girl named Petranek, and who was to have been sentenced this morning, had his case continued for a week. It is thought that he will ask for a new trial.

Shear's Stock.

Abe P. Leach, assignee of C. B. Shear, the insolvent hardware man, has been granted permission by the court to sell the stock in the store at the northwest corner of Tenth and Washington streets.

THE MARSH IS DOOMED

West Oakland's Enterprising Citizens Are at Work.

All Is Finally Arranged for the Reclamation of a Section.

The West Oakland Improvement Club met at Hansen's Hall last evening and listened to an address by Captain John Hackett of the Pacific Coast Reclamation & Dredging Company. Captain Hackett is a member of the club and made a strong speech in favor of further improvements in West Oakland. He stated his interests in and about West Oakland are extensive and it was his opinin that his dredger will not leave West Oakland after filling in the depression from Pine to Sixteenth street but will continue work until the entire marsh is filled in.

He congratulated the club on being one of the most active and energetic organizations that he was ever connected with and said it was a God send to West Oakland. The captain also stated that the Southern Pacific Company had informed him of its willingness to do all in its power to improve West Oakland.

The club has collected the necessary amount of money to fill in a depression at the head of Pine street and Captain Hackett will soon put his dredger to work there.

The following communication was sent by the club to F. S. Douty, manager of the Pacific Improvement Company.

West Oakland, June 16, 1896.

Mr. F. S. Douty, Manager Pacific Improvement Company, S. P. Co. Building, corner Market and Montgomery streets, San Francisco: Dear Sir:—The necessary money required for the "filling in" of a portion of the depression, corner Pine and Lincoln streets, West Oakland, has been collected and is now in the hands of the club and awaits your pleasure.

Very truly yours,
WEST OAKLAND IMPROVEMENT CLUB, by John C. Bullock, Acting President.

TO RATIFY SATURDAY.

The Republican Clubs Will Join in a Big Hurrah.

At the meeting held by the secretary and presidents of all Republican clubs throughout the country last evening in Judge Allen's court room, it was decided to hold a big ratification meeting Saturday evening at the Tabernacle to celebrate the nomination of a Republican President. Judge McElroy of the Grand Army and Navy League will be chairman of the evening and speeches will be made by many prominent speakers. The meeting will be preceded by a grand street parade in which all Republican clubs will fall in line.

The secretaries will give the members twelve hours' notice.

Bay City Flour is whitest.

THE RIGHT SORT.

R. J. Fencion Admitted to Citizenship by Judge Ogden.

R. J. Fencion, a native of Ireland, was admitted to citizenship this morning, having passed a fine examination before Judge Ogden.

At the close of the examination on the constitution, Judge Ogden said:

"You have relatives subject to the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. If your brother should be called upon to defend that monarchy and it should be necessary for this country to fight England could you fight against England, although you know that you were fighting against your brother?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Do you think you could fight with all your heart if you know you were fighting against your brother and against England?"

"I could."

"And you would do it?"

"I would."

"Very well, then, I will swear you," said the judge, and Fencion became an American.

Rights of Advertisers.

Judge Wood has decided that it is not a misdemeanor to cover a wagon with a transparency, covered with advertisements and cause it to be drawn through the streets.

Col. J. L. Lyon tested the ordinance which proclaims such a state of facts to constitute an offense. He raised the point that that section of the ordinance was not embodied in the title which is "An ordinance to prohibit the defacing of buildings and trees by advertising notices and to prohibit carrying of placards and distribution of advertising notices on the sidewalks of the city of Oakland."

The Curtis Case.

Thomas F. Agnew Jr., this morning in the Police Court, told on the stand substantially the same facts as set forth in the affidavit filed yesterday in which he charged Officer Curtis with trying to induce him to serve as a juror in a Chinese lottery case and vote for conviction. Curtis filed a counter affidavit denying all of Agnew's statements. Judge Wood took the matter under advisement until tomorrow.

COLLIDED AT SEA.

A Big British Steamer Sinks off the French Coast.

TWO MEN PICKED UP.

It Is Feared That Over 200 Lives Have Been Lost.

ONE OF THE SHIPS UNKNOWN.

The Drummond Castle the Name of the Boat Wrecked.

By Associated Press to The Tribune.

BREST, France, June 17.—The British steamer Drummond Castle, Captain N. M. Pierle, from Cape Town, for London, collided at midnight with an unknown steamer and sank three minutes later with 144 passengers and 103 officers and crew on board.

Two men were picked up floating on small wreckage, by a fisherman off Ushant, at which point the steamer went down.

It is hoped some passengers and crew escaped in boats.

The Drummond Castle belonged to the famous Castle Line of steamships running between South Africa and London.

She was about 2,350 tons register and was last heard of at Las Palmas, Canary Islands, June 12th.

Tugs have been sent from this port to the scene of the disaster in the hope of picking up some survivors.

The fate of the steamer with which she collided is not known.

Bay City Flour makes the best bread.

The Everett Estate.

Judge Greene has issued a decree of distribution in the estate of William Everett, deceased, under which the widow Amelia Everett, receives one-half of the property, the residue being divided equally between the three children, Lilian M. Curtiss, Edward A. Everett and Guy T. Everett. The estate comprises property in Pomona and an interest in the "Rattler Mine" and Old Ben Butler Mine, Flat creek, Shasta County.

Delinquent Taxes.

County Tax Collector Barber has just concluded sending out postal cards to tax payers notifying them that the tax on their property is delinquent and must be paid before July 3rd, otherwise their property will be sold to satisfy the same.

Oil Works Attached

Deputy Sheriff Will White has levied another attachment against the Eureka Oil Works of West Berkeley in the sum of $1000. It was done in favor of a creditor in San Francisco named Higgins.

Appraisers Announced.

Philo E. Daniels, W. B. Harsy and A. L. McPherson have been appointed appraisers of the estate of Hannah G. Noyes.

A South Paris (Me.) solid man—400 pounds in stocking feet—tried to get excused from jury duty on account of his size. But the judge ordered him an extra broad chair and told him to sit; and he sat.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Nobles Have a Drawing-Card at the Oakland.

An enthusiastic audience greeted the Nobles company last night at he Oakland Theater.

"Love and Law" is brim full of good comedy, exciting situations, thrilling climaxes, entertaining dialogue and repartee. It is not a blood-curdling nor impossible play, on the contrary, there is nothing of the blood-and-thunder nature about it.

Mr. and Mrs. Nobles made a most emphatic hit in their respective roles—Mr. Nobles as the comical Irish lawyer and Mrs. Nobles as "Rita," the Italian street singer. The other members of the company were all well cast and played their parts to the entire satisfaction of every one present. Judging from the enthusiasm displayed last night, "Love and Law" will do even a larger business than "From Sire to Son." It is a far more lively play and the scenes and incidents follow each other in rapid succession.

NAT GOODWIN.

An important attraction is announced for next Monday and Tuesday evenings in the engagement of the eminent comedian, Nat C. Goodwin.

"In Mizzoura" will be presented the opening night, in which Mr. Goodwin will be seen in the role of Jim Radburn.

Tuesday evening Henry Guy Carleton's great success, "A Gilded Fool," will be produced. The sale of seats begins next Thursday evening.

To enjoy a pleasant evening take the California Railway to Leona Heights, and return.

GARDNER IS SAFE.

Failure of Mayor Davie's Attempts to Depose the Police Clerk.

The Mayor has made another attempt to depose Police Clerk Gardner and has again failed. He brought the matter up at the meeting of the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners, at which a decision was to be rendered as to Gardner's guilt on the forgery charge.

The Mayor had the resolution declaring the place vacant ready and introduced it. City Attorney Piersol explained that the Board had not the power to carry out the resolution if it were passed, as Gardner was not appointed by it but by Chief Lloyd.

City Engineer Wilson and Piersol voted against the resolution and it was lost.

A resolution was then passed requesting all employes to carefully compare and check up all goods before receipting for them.

It was recommended that J. W. Bankhead, foreman of truck 1, be transferred to extraman of engine No. 2, that Mike Quigley, extraman of engine No. 2, be given the foremanship made vacant, and that John Fitzsimmons, steward of chemical No. 1, be dismissed from the fire department.

At the request of the Mayor no action will be taken on the matters for one week.

OIL IS POURED ON.

The Troubled Waters of the Exposition Now at Rest.

ITS SUCCESS IS ASSURED.

An Unqualified Endorsement by the Merchants' Exchange.

OIL DEVELOPING DEBATED.

Private Workers Are Afraid of the Eastern Trusts.

At the meeting of the Merchants' Exchange last night, the following resolution was introduced by George L. Fish:

"Resolved, That the Oakland Exposition has the hearty endorsement of the Merchants' Exchange, and that the Secretary be and is hereby instructed to communicate with the Board of Directors of the Exposition to ascertain what work or assistance may be required of the Merchants' Exchange to assist them in making the Exposition a success."

This is practically the same resolution introduced by Mr. Fish at the last meeting of the Directors of the Exchange, and which, after speeches opposing the adoption of the same had been made by Messrs. Sinclair and Arper, was laid over for two weeks.

Last night, Messrs. Sinclair and Arper, while claiming the right to criticise any project which came up before the Exchange, expressed the hope that the forthcoming exposition would be a success.

One of the charges made at the last meeting of the Exchange against the Exposition Association was that it had misappropriated $1700 which had been intended for charity to its own use.

Theodore Gier, who is a member of the Exposition Association, as also of the Exchange, said that he knew the sentiment of the members of the Exposition Association, and that it was not their idea that the proceeds of the last Exposition should be considered private funds, but that they should be kept in trust for future Expositions for the city of Oakland and for the welfare of the city.

President Witcher then called Mr. Arper to the chair and said that he was very sorry that anything had been said in the Exchange that could be construed into a criticism. He had been one of the men who had been appointed as one of the Directors of last year's Exposition, and had resigned for one reason only. He had gone on the Board and understood that the Exposition was to be for the merchants, manufacturers and mechanics, but ascertained that it was only for the manufacturers and producers. The merchants were not expected, on account of lack of space, to take part. When he had found that out, he had tendered his resignation as a Director. But the gentlemen went ahead and made the Exposition a great success. It had been spoken of favorably, not alone by the press of this vicinity, but also in the State. It had brought a great many people to the county and had resulted as a great benefit. He thought the directors of the enterprise were entitled to a great deal of credit for their efforts. It might be true that the association was a private corporation; still, he thought it could do a great deal of good. Next year the association might be able to erect a building of its own. Those gentlemen were entitled to do what they wanted with the funds, but he was in favor of encouraging the enterprise.

John A. Britton said that his name had been mentioned as a cradle in the matter by the press, and that he unfortunately had not been able to be present at the last meeting, when the Exposition had been under discussion. Of course, reporters might not be infallible. They had a faculty for looking underneath for the current that was running under the surface, and he thought there must have been underlying a feeling of bad intention at the last meeting. He knew that such a feeling had existed before the last meeting. There seemed to be a little jarring, a little rubbing together and opposition, not toward the Oakland Exposition, but toward individuals connected with the Oakland Exposition. A year ago, he continued, the Exposition had been a success, and he was sure it would be a success this year. If it should turn out in that manner it would result to the benefit of Oakland.

THE OIL MATTER.

E. M. Hoagland, representing Napa oil prospectors, was allowed the floor, and said that he had understood that the Exchange intended to discuss the question of developing the oil deposits in Contra Costa County. He took occasion to say that a purse had been raised in Napa for the purpose of making wells in Contra Costa, and that as soon as they had begun to secure leases from the farmers they had found that other persons had jumped and tried to do the same thing, and had created a prejudice in the minds of the land holders against the Napa people, who held, among other leases, a lease on the Miner ranch, which they were operating.

In response to a number of questions by Mr. Britton, Hoagland said that his object in coming before the Board was to admonish the members to beware of aiding everybody who pretended to be desirous of developing the oil industry, especially if the developers were the Pacific Coast Oil Company or the Standard Oil Company, which was the same thing. He had lost all the money he had put into the business as a result of the peculiar way those corporations had of doing business.

Col. Sontag, ex-Prison Director, who is something of an oil man himself, and to whom Hoagland had indirectly referred during his talk, was allowed the floor. He told of his connection with the oil raisers of Los Angeles; how, within an area of six acres, they had an output of 2500 barrels a day. The oil was a fuel oil and they had an outlet for but 1200 barrels a day. He had gone to San Francisco for the purpose of securing an outlet for the overplus of oil. He referred to the fact that a great deal of their oil found its way into Contra Costa County, among the consumers being the Giant Powder Works, which consumed 2000 barrels a month, and the Selby Smelting Works, which had a minimum order of 2500 barrels per month. There were plenty of factories in San Francisco, the expenses of running which would be reduced if the fuel could only be obtained near at hand. The rolling mills of Los Angeles were sending plates to San Francisco, because, by using oil for fuel, they could turn out the work so much cheaper. He had concluded that oil could be got within fifty miles of San Francisco. He had become acquainted with A. McPherson. He had heard that that gentleman had a number of leases on oil lands. He had seen the lands under lease, and if he had seen croppings of gold or silver on the ground as favorable as he had seen indications of oil, he could promise a fortune to the prospectors. He said he would take the contracts, and he had done so, and since the 5th of June he had been working with a view of developing the wells. His idea was to get more contracts. He had seen some of the farmers. The second time he had seen some of them he had received the cold shoulder, because of what somebody had presumably said about his work. He had seen Hoagland and knew what he was engaged in. But Sontag, speaking for himself, said that he asked no assistance from any one. He had the capital behind him. He had ordered his cable and some heavy timbers, and yesterday two cars of material had been shipped to the scene. He was going to have a rig to sink, if necessary, a well of 2000 feet. If he should strike oil it would be a great thing for Oakland. He had money enough to carry out the work. All he wanted was to find the oil.

"You're not connected with the Standard Oil Company?" asked Mr. Arper.

"Not that I am aware of, and I am not connected with the Pacific Coast Oil Company at all," was the reply.

Col. Sontag said that he expected to find not alone fuel oil in the hills, but also illuminating oil.

Mr. Hoagland said that he hoped Col. Sontag was an innocent party in the enterprise.

Col. Sontag said that he had put up his money in the business, and that nobody controlled him.

Hoagland again took the floor, and said that McPherson had gone to him and said that he had heard that he (Hoagland) had induced some people in Napa to get interested in the oil business, and that if the Napa people would go into the business he (McPherson) would like to go in with them. McPherson said he would turn over all his leases to the Napa folks or the speaker, except a few that he wanted to hold for a speculation. McPherson, continued Hoagland, had been a clerk of the Pacific Coast Oil Company, and had an agreement with that company to let them know whatever he did in the oil business. The speaker said he had asked what leases McPherson had and had been shown them. The leases had been obtained, he said, on the condition that work and the development of the wells was to begin in one year, or that a rent of $1 per acre was to be paid for the land. He had seen that the leases were about to expire, and had told McPherson so, but the latter had said that such was not the case, because he could take a pick and shovel and go all over the land covered by the leases in a short time, and that the farmers could not object, because they did not have a dollar to fight the case in the courts. It had been agreed that it would be best to hold a meeting on Saturday night to meet the farmers at Thompson's blacksmith shop. When the speaker had reached the shop he had found McPherson there and Sontag "standing Thompson up" for a lease of his land. When McPherson had seen Hoagland, he had said that it was all up between him and the speaker and he had turned the leases over to Sontag, who, he claimed, had $15,000 in bank.

Col. Sontag said he thought it bad taste for Hoagland to stand there and tell all that had been said with McPherson. The Colonel said that he did not want to be placed in the light of an antagonist to Hoagland. So far as he was concerned, he wanted to say that Hoagland had his best wishes.

Then Hoagland said he did not believe McPherson was an innocent party, and he would like to have him present to hear it. Hoagland then asserted that while Col. Sontag had said he had induced San Francisco people to buy Los Angeles oil, he had never heard of the affair before, on the contrary he knew that Armstrong, a member of the National Supply Company, had done that work and held the contracts for it now. He thought the people would like to know about the business, so that the Pacific Coast Oil Company might be kept out, and he knew that Mr. McPherson was interested in it.

George L. Fish endorsed Colonel Sontag.

John A. Britton expressed his gratification, after repeated failures to work the Contra Costa wells, that some person had come forward to do the work, and President Witcher said he was glad to have individuals and a corporation undertake the industry, and he was satisfied that it would be for the interest of this city.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Alameda Boating Club holds a regatta on June 27th.

The annual shoot of Company F, N. G. C. is billed for next Saturday at Shell Mound Park.

THE UMPIRE.

Baseball is booming, boxing is at its height, wheeling is the rage, tennis will soon be in full swing and football is in sight. This is the encouraging outlook for a summer of activity in the sporting world of California and there certainly should be no lack of amusements. The various clubs and athletic organizations are shaking off the drowsiness of the past and certainly the prospects are decidedly pleasing.

Now that everything is in readiness, all that is necessary for the public in general to do is to come to the center with a smile and be on hand to enjoy as well as encourage the sports.

The Sharkey boom is waning somewhat for the big bruiser has now become a familiar figure on the streets as well as in the club room. The fact that his training quarters have been established in the Acme Club has served one good purpose at least, for it has been the signal for greatly increased attendance. Sharkey has been admired, talked to and interviewed until he is sick of that kind of business, for the fighter has not much of a social nature in his make-up. Indeed, his chief occupation when he is not in training, is remaining silent and even to his most intimate friends he never unburdens his soul, while an outsider must consider himself fortunate if the big man condescends to answer a question in a longer sentence than "Yes," or "No."

Under the able training of Danny Needham, Sharkey is improving, materially, though he is not working as if he had a really big fight on his hands. That he is slow, everybody acknowledges, but it is recognized that when he does hit, something is going to drop. If by any accident, Sharkey should land on Corbett's chin it may be all up with the champion for the sailor's blows are terrible.

Sporting men are inclined to the belief that, Sharkey's tactics will be to stand up and take punishment as fast as it is meted out to him by Corbett for four rounds and he certainly will be able to stand a great deal of this treatment. The somewhat lax methods of training are pointed to to corroborate this idea. The big man will not admit anything of the kind and in fact, from all that can be learned, has not yet decided what he will do when he enters the ring.

The possibility of Sharkey knocking Corbet out is so remote that bets as high as 50 to 1 are offered and even at that price very few takers are in evidence. With gambling men, this is a good bet if lost and there always remains the one possibility of winning. The betting is chiefly centered on the number of rounds Sharkey will stand up and the possibility of his landing blows on Corbett. Bets on the latter are frequent and some are willing to put up money that the sailor will not touch Corbett at all, that is not land a good blow. As to the former, Corbett himself has cautioned his friends not to place bets on his knocking Sharkey out. There is every possibility that there will be no knockout at all, for it is an easy matter to a man like Sharkey to take punishment.

If the story in circulation has any truth in it, Corbett does not intend to injure the sailor lad, but instead will strive to give him a little cheap reputation and advertising for business purposes. The statements are made that the match is a put up job and that next theatrical season, Corbett and Sharkey will be seen on the stage in a new play now being written for them and controlled by Brady.

It is claimed that this is the inside of the whole affair and if so, explains why Corbett is willing to risk so much for such small gain. It is said his home coming was principally to pick up some clever pugilist to work with him next season and as Sharkey has never been whipped, he was selected. Then too, he is a fine specimen of manhood and with the reputation of having stood up to the champion of the world for four rounds he would be a drawing card. It is also a well known fact that Corbett is more or less vain and his face would show up in favorable contrast to Sharkey's before the footlights. These may be idle rumors but it is certainly the talk that is going the rounds of sporting circles.

If Corbett intended to follow up his pugilistic career, why did he give his championship belt to Maher, who in turn lost it to Fitzsimmons. This is a point that is worrying many and would seem to bear out the idea that the champion only enters the ring for the sake of advertising Sharkey for the theatrical enterprise.

The expulsion of De Witt Van Court from the Acme Club has created a decided sensation among the sporting fraternity all over the Coast, for he is better known perhaps than any one other club man, being prominently identified with many important athletic efforts, not to say anything of his career in the baseball line.

It is needless to repeat the alleged grounds for the expulsion, for everybody interested is familiar with them, but in justice to Van Court, guilty or not guilty, it is only fair that he should have his say, for there are always two sides to every story and thus far indignities have been heaped upon his head through the public press without allowing him much opportunity to present his case. Van Court still has many friends in the club for which he has done so much and his summary dismissal has caused a shadow to hang about the club rooms.

It must not be argued that the Umpire is taking up Van Court's fight, for such is not the case, for if he is guilty of the charges made, he certainly deserves severe censure, but as the sensational portion of the story from the Directors' side has been given so much prominence as I before said it is only fair that Van Court should be heard before the public. His story is as follows:

"The Board of Directors of the club stated that I admitted I tried to entice seventy-five members from the club, which I deny and which they cannot prove. I admitted that I applied to the Reliance Club for a position with Professors Leandro and Williamson, and I claim every man has a right to better himself if he can. We were instructed on two occasions by President George F. Neece of the Acme, that we were to be laid off during the months of July and August and coming from the head of the club we had every reason to believe it true.

"We informed the athletes of these facts and they immediately rebelled, and openly stated that they would go to the Reliance Club with us if we could get positions there. They started a petition and secured a number of signatures in a few minutes. The petition was started without any request or suggestion from me. I feel that I am no more to blame for that than any of the other professors.

"As to my being a traitor to the club I would like to ask the members whether I am any more of a traitor for trying to better myself than members who allow themselves to be elected to manage the club, then plunge it into debt and make no attempt to build it up financially or otherwise."

"As to my expulsion I am still as much a member of the Acme Club as any member there, and better entitled to membership than two of the Directors who expelled me, as one was elected to office when he was in arrears for dues, and the same officer with one other director has been more than three months in arrears for dues; and instructed me to keep out members who owed less than he.

"A clause in the constitution and by-laws states that charges against a member must be made in writing not less than five days before trial, the charged member must be given a fair hearing and if proven guilty may be reprimanded or asked to resign, and until he absolutely refuses to resign he cannot be expelled. I was not given five minutes' notice or hearing, and further they have no grounds for even asking me to resign.

"I wish to state that the Board of Directors of the Reliance Club have had nothing whatever to do with this affair as I went to them for a position, they having made no offers whatever."

Van Court has signed with the Reliance Club and will assume his duties in July.

The advent of horse racing on the Oakland Trotting Park is being looked forward to with pleasure by lovers of the sport. The old track is being refitted in fine style under the direction of the California Jockey Club, but more personally supervised by its President, Thomas H. Williams, who has done so much for racing on this coast. The new track will be built on scientific plans and promises to be one of the finest in the United States. The old course is being regraded and back stretch will be lowered though near the grand stand there will be a raise of grade to establish a level the entire distance. Very careful preliminary surveys have been made and nothing will be left undone to facilitate speed.

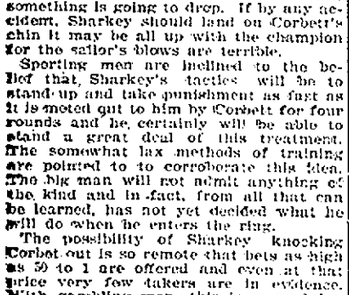

And now the season for summer outings approaches, tennis again comes to the front. Some time ago the game cut a prominent figure in social and sporting circles in Oakland, but of late it has been slumbering and no particular interest have been shown. The carefully prepared courts have been allowed to be ruined and many are now overgrown with weeds. The bitumen courts have been neglected and the excellently equipped home of the Oakland Tennis Club, in East Oakland, has been turned into a bicycle academy. This was indeed a sad state of affairs for the future of the game, but let us hope that this coming revival will not be of mushroom type, but instead stimulate the sport so that in the future summer, spring and fall months, there will be no lack of amusement in this line.

The near approach of the Pacific Coast championship games has created the new boom. These take place as usual in San Rafael and if the past is to be any criterion, certainly will be interesting, though the absence of Sumner Hardy, the present champion, will detract from the interest in the meet.

The events will be strictly gentlemen's singles, though some exhibition doubles and ladies' matches will be witnessed. The finals will not however determine the championship for the winner must meet young Hardy before he can claim the honors. As Hardy is in Alaska at present, the prospects for a match with him are far distant.

San Rafael is the center of society during the championship meets. Tennis is recognized as a society sport being championed and patronized by the upper ten, almost exclusively. As well it is a game that the ladies are interested in, for they are allowed to wield the racquet as well as the men. Some argue that this is detrimental to the sport and point to the fact that the fair sex is excluded rigidly from nearly all other games. But why is this—chiefly because football, baseball and the like are not suited to woman, being altogether too rough. The belief that the ladies are a set back to the game and have helped to smother it in the past is purely a fallacy.

SATURDAY PRESS WINS.

The Emeralds Are Defeated After a Hard Struggle.

Sunday afternoon the Saturday Press baseball nine of West Oakland and the Emeralds of North Oakland crossed bats on the new grounds at Nineteenth and Peralta streets before an assemblage of fully 1500 people. This was the first game played on the grounds and although the score was all one-sided in favor of the West End boys yet the contest was a very interesting one and many brilliant plays were made by both sides. The only disappointment of the day was the failure of the balloon ascension which was announced to take place.

The cause was the fact that Professor George, who was to make the ascent, fell from a bicycle Saturday evening, sustaining injuries which prevented him from carrying out his part of the programme.

The Saturday Press Club started the game with a rush and scored three runs in the first inning. They did not score again until the fourth when one man reached home. In the fifth and sixth innings they did their heaviest work, making nine runs in those innings. The Emeralds could not measure Shea's curving balls and were unable to score until the fifth inning when three men crossed the home plate. They made another in the sixth and two in the seventh which were the only runs they could secure.

Some of the principal features of the contest was the strong battery work of Shea and Peters, the superb manner in which both Rollins and Wilderbrandt covered first base, and the home run drive made by Jack Keating.

Throughout the entire game much enthusiasm prevailed and every good play made by the tossers evoked loud applause from their adherents.

The score in detail is as follows:

A TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

The Annual Championships to Take Place in July.

The time rapidly approaches for the ninth annual lawn tennis championship of the Pacific Coast, which will be held, as heretofore, at the Hotel Rafael, San Rafael, on the 3d and 4th of July.

It is expected that many new players of considerable ability will enter this year to try and wrest the trophy from the former champions.

Sumner Hardy is the present champion, being the first winner of the silver cup that must be won three times to become the personal property of any player. Mr. Hardy is at present in Alaska, and will not be here to defend his title, so the result of the tournament is difficult to foretell.

Sam Hardy, his brother, is perhaps the most likely candidate, though Robert Whitney and his brother George are clever players and may spring some pleasant surprises. They are members of the California Lawn Tennis Club, in San Francisco, and local enthusiasts hope Oakland's favorite may win, thus keeping the trophy on this side of the bay, where it has been since 1892. Walter Magee will enter from Oakland.

The entrance fee is one dollar, and the list closes on July 1st at 5 P. M.

The winner of the all-comers' tournament will be presented with a handsome prize (value $100) and the runner-up second prize (value $50) by the Pacific States Lawn Tennis Association.

A silver cup is offered by the association for the match between the winner of the all-comers' tournament and the present champion, to become the personal property of the winner when won three times, not necessarily in succession.

All matches will be the best two out of three, except the finals and championship matches, which will be three out of five.

The Tournament Committee is composed of Sam Hardy, Chairman, H. Parker, Walter Magee; referee, Geo. F. Whitney.

The following is the Executive Committee: R. N. Whitney, President; Sumner Hardy, Vice President; A. Starr Keeler, Secretary-Treasurer; George F. Whitney, Samuel Hardy, D. E. Allison Jr. and Walter Magee.

THE OAKLAND NAVY.

The Surprise Beats the Amalia in a Close Contest.

The regular monthly Oakland Navy races took place on the estuary last Sunday and drew a large crowd of interested yachtsmen to the scene. No mishap of any consequence marred the sport, and the event was one of the most interesting yet held. When the starting gun boomed forth shortly after 2 o'clock, the following boats crossed the line: Mirth, white class cruiser; Annie, red class cruiser; Aeolus, sloop, red class cruiser; Nettie, red class cruiser; Aelous, canoe, red class cruiser; Surprise, white class racer; Lucile, red class cruiser; Hurricane, red class cruiser; Amalia, red class racer; Nautilus, red class racer; Ralph B., white class cruiser.

The race soon developed the fact that either the Amalia or the Surprise would come in first. The Surprise was sailed by Arthur Smith, while Captain Dermody handled the Amalia. On the first round the Amalia had a fair lead, though the Surprise was making good time. When, however, the Amalia's jib broke away, the Surprise had the advantage, and won by one minute and eight seconds.

The Nettie, Hurricane and Lucile withdrew from the race before the finish. The Mirth, Surprise, Amalia and Nautilus were the winners in their classes.

The corrected time of the boats which finished is as follows: Mirth, 1:34:15; Annie, 1:32:02; Aeolus, sloop, 1:46:21; Aeolus, canoe, 1:28:22; Surprise, 1:24:07; Amalia, 1:25:15; Nautilus, 1:51:31; Ralph B., 1:43:14.

Points were awarded as follows: Mirth, class 25, general 10; Annie, class 20, general 20; Surprise, class 25, general 50; Amalia, class 25, general 40; Nautilus, class 25, general 20; Ralph B., class 20.

CROSS COUNTRY RUN.

The Reliance and Olympic Wheelmen Enjoy Themselves.

Recently the Reliance wheelmen entertained the Olympic Club cyclers with a joint run to Lake Chabot. This time it was the Olympics' turn to do the "proper thing" and they did it royally. The two clubs marshalled under their respective captains from Tenth and Howard streets, San Francisco, at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, and a run to Woodside was made by one o'clock. On the way President Eaton of the Olympic Club entertained the wheelmen at San Mateo.

The run was most enjoyable and entirely free from any accidents whatever.

Next Sunday the Reliance Wheeling Annex will hold its first race over the San Leandro triangle for the purpose of selecting a team to compete for the Baker & Hamilton trophy, to be awarded to the winners of the twenty mile road race which takes place July 1st.

The trophy is a beautiful silver cup, gold lined, standing thirty-two inches high. It was made at a cost of $500. A drawing of the cup is on exhibition at the Reliance rooms.

BANTAM CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The Boxing and Wrestling Matches Will Occur June 30th.

The bantam weight boxing tournament for the championship of the Pacific Coast will open at the Oakland Athletic Club gymnasium on Tuesday evening, June 30th. Sanctions have been received from the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, and already extensive preparations have been made for the affair.

Many amateur boxers are now in training for the event, and when the gong sounds on the opening night an excellent programme will be announced.

As well, there will be some clever wrestling matches, one of special interest between Harry Gelder, the champion feather weight of the coast, and R. Wixon, of the light weight class.

J. M. Whelan announces his willingness to meet any amateur boxer of from 123 to 135 pounds weight on the Pacific Coast, either in a limited or finish fight. He is a pupil of Jimmy Carroll, and is said to be very clever with the gloves.

"UNKNOWN" SHOOTERS.

A New Club Which Will Perforate the Target.

At the prize shoot of the "Unknown" Club, at Bird's Point, Alameda, Sunday, the first prize of $1 was won by H. Betten; second prize, 75 cents, by "Sport"; third prize, 50 cents, by Al Bohm, and fourth prize, 25 cents, by M. Ulrichs.

The charter of the club is still open, and the next meeting will take place in San Francisco at 400 Olive avenue. The Pacific grounds will be the scene of the coming shoot.

Sunday's prizes were donated by Captain Lewis.

CYCLING IN FRANCE.

Comment on the Defeat of the American Rider.

The defeat of John S. Johnson abroad by three foreign riders has been the subject of considerable comment. That this rider, who has proved himself a prize winner and champion on this side of the water, should be so unmercifully trounced by men who would not stand a ghost of a show against at least four American riders, is naturally a matter that has proved irritable to the sensitive natures of Americans, who look upon successful conquests in Europe as a matter of course.

But it must be understood that racing in France is much different from the methods employed by promoters in this country. Across the briny a champion cyclist is the envied of the envied. He is feted and treated like a lord while his star is in the ascendency, but let him fall and the sympathies of the nation fly to the man who is his conqueror. Naturally an intrepid race, the Frenchmen make the most of their nerve, particularly in cycle racing, where there are so many competitors and where it is a hard matter to remain on top very long. The tracks are small and well banked. To see the riders skurrying around the turns or into the stretch is worth going miles to witness. They do not know what fear is, and American racing men must become accustomed to such competition. The method of pacemaking in vogue in France has gotten down to a system, and French racing men know how to follow pace. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that Johnson has made no better showing.

It is a great honor in France to win the Brassard medal, or plate, as it is called. This decoration is attached to the arm and is worn by the rider so long as he is able to retain it. Of course the event is not run every day, but when it is called the French riders fight tooth and nail for the trophy. Each track has such a plate, and it is highly prized indeed.

ACME ROAD RACE.

Good Time Made Despite the Poorness of the Roads.

George Westphal, with a three minute handicap, won the Acme Club ten mile race Sunday in 27 minutes and 40 seconds.

The start was made from Fruitvale at 11 o'clock, and considering the bad condition of the roads the time was excellent.

T. A. Schleuter, with two minutes' allowance, made the best time, 27 minutes and 32 seconds. Pete Lefevre, scratch, would probably have made the results different were it not for the fact that he punctured his rear tire near the finish. As it was, he came in next to last.

The following table shows the entire results:

| Position. | Contestants | Handicap. | Net Riding Time. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | G. Westphal | 3:00 | 27:40 |
| 2 | G. A. Wyman | 2:45 | 28:12 |
| 3 | T. A. Schleuter | 2:00 | 27:32 |
| 4 | J. H. Otey | 2:30 | 28:14 |
| 5 | C. H. Staples | 1:45 | 28:20 |
| 6 | J. J. Gallagher | 4:00 | 30:20 |
| 7 | E. J. Smith | 1:30 | 28:00 |
| 8 | A. H. Agnew | 1:45 | 29:16 |
| 9 | A. S. McDougall | 1:00 | 28:34 |
| 10 | F. Cortage | 1:30 | 29:31 |
| 11 | G. H. Crafts | scratch | 28:10 |
| 12 | P. M. Lefevre | scratch | 28:25 |
| 13 | M. F. Rose | scratch | 28:30 |

The prizes were: First place, $20 in merchandise; best time, $10 in merchandise; second place, pair of Morgan & Wright racing tires; third, $7.50 bath robe; fourth, $5 in merchandise; fifth, racing suit, and sixth, a year's subscription to the Western Wheelman.
